He said the assignments the students might complete would include various letters they could be required to write in a professional setting, as well as a speech component to prepare them for presentations they might have to give.

Robert Corum, head of the Department of Modern Languages, said his department will start offering Swahili 101 as part of a contribution to the African studies program.

"We will also be working towards an Italian minor," Corum said. Corum also said more Swahili classes will be offered as students progress in the program.

The A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications will offer convergence reporting for the first time as a way to provide students experience in various forms of journalism.

Businesses are looking for people with experience in different media fields, said Angela Powers, director of the Miller school.

Powers said the class will be open to 16 students who meet certain requirements. Students who want to enroll must have junior standing, instructor permission and a passing grade in advanced news and feature writing.

Powers described the class as a hands-on reporting class in which students' stories will be presented through more than one campus media outlet.

She said the Collegian, KSDB-FM 91.9 and Manhattan Matters are some of the on-campus outlets that will be involved in the program.

Connie Schmidt, administrative specialist for the Department of Finance, said although the finance department will not offer any new classes, faculty members are working on an integrated investment management program that most likely will begin in the spring.

Students can find all of the new courses offered at K-State by including talking to an adviser or department head or looking in the K-State Course Catalog six hours of Spanish," Freeland said. "We lived with Ecuadorian families, so we really had to learn the language quickly."

She said she always has been interested in traveling overseas and appreciated different cultures.

"I think it's important for people to know how the rest of the world lives," Freeland said. "We may do things one way, but just because somebody does something a different way doesn't mean it's wrong!

Steven Graham, assistant to the dean in the College of Agriculture, said students should consider joining the organization, because employers value international experience. Graham served in Benin, a French-speaking country in West Africa.

"The Peace Corps teaches about cultures, languages and more about world economy and how it functions, impacts the U.S. and how the U.S. impacts other economies," Graham said. "You're seeing it first hand, and employers value that type of experience, and they're looking for that background."

Graham also said he still keeps in contact with Peace Corps volunteers he served with in Benin.

"There are challenges you have to figure out throughout your life," he said. "The skills you learn in Peace Corps gets you interested in what you had not thought of."

LJ Sedlacek, campus Peace Corps recruiter, said students seeking more information should contact former volunteers. More than 500 K-State alumni have served in the Peace Corps during the organization's 46-year history, and she said many former volunteers are happy to talk about their experiences.

Students can join a mailing list in Sedlacek's office at Waters 144. She also said students should check out the Web site, www.peacecorps.gov, for more information. The free final information meeting for the semester will be from 5:30 to 7 p.m. April 30 in Waters 137.

Freeze damages nearly half of Kansas wheat crop

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA - Nearly half of the Kansas winter wheat crop suffered some freeze damage, but it is too early to determine the full effect of the weekend's arctic blast, Kansas Agricultural Statistics Service said Monday.

The latest weekly crop condition report covered conditions as of Sunday night, on the heels of the weekend's freezing temperatures

A week ago, the agency reported 91 percent of the crop was undamaged by winter freezes. On Monday, that estimate plummeted to only 54 percent that was not damaged by freezing temperatures.

KASS said 15 percent of the winter wheat received light freeze damage and 15 percent was moderately damaged, while about 16 percent suffered severe damage.

The service's report, based on drive-by inspections, is an indication of how many fields were damaged, statistician Eddie Wells said.

"There certainly is an impact out there, but we wouldn't know what that level is," he said.

Overall crop conditions rapidly deteriorated from what just a week ago had been shaping up to be a bumper wheat crop. KASS rated the crop Monday as 18 percent excellent and 37 percent good. About 29 percent was in fair shape and 16 percent was in poor to very poor condition.

Experts warned farmers not to rush to conclusions, saying it will be at least a week before it can be determined whether the crop can recover. Before the extent of the damage can be assessed, temperatures have to warm up enough so the plants start growing again.

"We had temperatures low enough to do damage, but at this time we don't know the extent or expanse of the damage," said Jim Shroyer, extension wheat specialist at K-State. "Don't pull the trigger on this crop too quickly,"

After a late spring freeze in 1997, many farmers tore up their winter wheat and replanted another crop, only to find that test strips of wheat left behind above-average yields.

"It is too early to tell the outcome," said Aaron Harries, director of marketing for the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers. We have to wait at least a week to see how plants respond."

Harries said he expected freeze damage to vary across the state, with the worst damage likely in south-central Kansas, where the wheat was in a more advanced state and thus more vulnerable to the low temperatures.

In the northwest, northcentral and west-central parts of the state, the crop probably fared the best because it was not as advanced, Harries said. Wheat in counties in western Kansas that got snow cover also probably did well because the snow would have insulated the wheat from low temperatures, he said. While Harries said he was worried, he is cautiously optimistic because wheat is a fairly resilient plant.

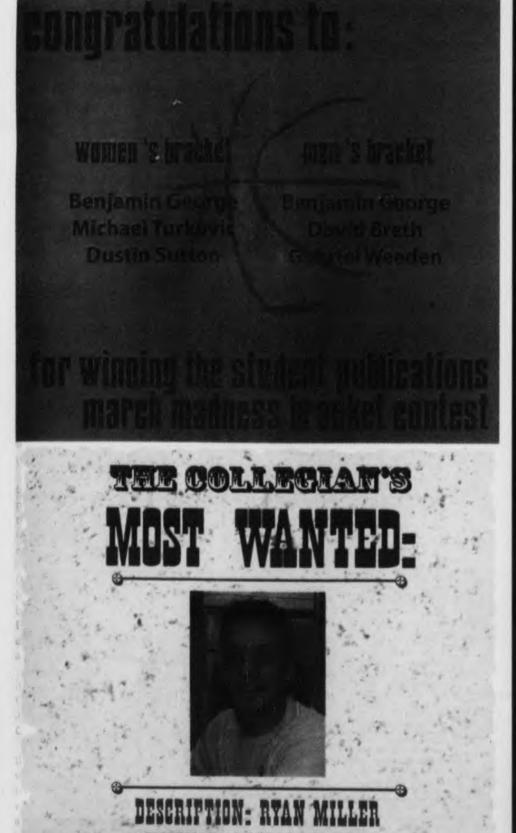

"I am no longer expecting a record crop, but if things fall into place, we are still looking at an average wheat crop," Harries said.

In Oxford, Kan., wheat grower Tom Morton said most of his wheat already was knee-high with its flag leaf out when the freeze hit.

Morton pulled a clump of wheat Monday morning and took it to the local grain co-op, where the plant was cut open so the wheat head could be examined. It looked normal, he said, but since temperatures had not warmed up enough for the plant to start growing, it was too early to tell.

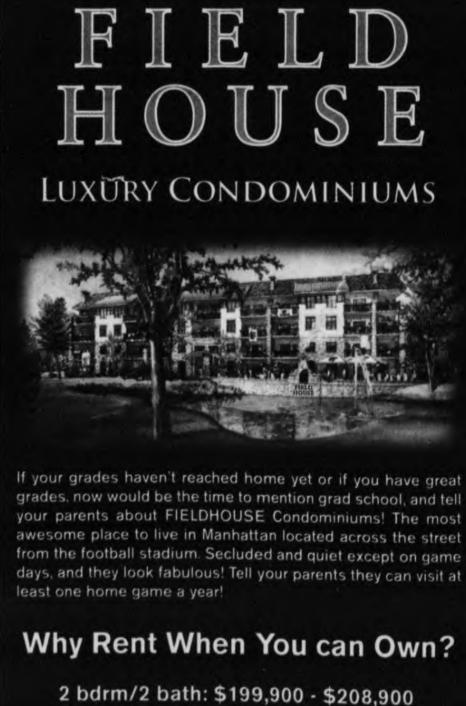

"We did have some awfully cold temperatures, and you can tell the wheat wilted a little bit," Morton said. "But what the long-term result is we don't know.

"I don't think we will be as lucky as we were in 1997, quite frankly. I think that was a once-in-a-lifetime deal."

Volunteers scan the skies to help warn public during severe weather

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To help ensure community safety during spring's severe weather period, Riley County officials use volunteer storm spotters, who give firsthand knowledge when severe weather enters the area.

Though the National Weather Service has the technology to watch a storm on radar, experts say having spotters in the field serving as the eyes and ears of the emergency chain can be invaluable.

"Even with all the technology used by the National Weather Service to prepare severe weather warnings, storm spotters still give us the most complete picture of what's really happening in and around severe storms," said Marie Johnson, representative from the National Weather Service. "Radar simply cannot tell us everything we need to know."

Fifteen volunteer storm spotters from a variety of backgrounds serve Riley County.

"It's a very diverse group," said Laurie Harrison, assistant emergency management director for Riley

Harrison said the group, whose members sometimes change, includes K-State students, Fort Riley soldiers and volunteers from the residential popula-forming educated hypotheses about its future path. If the NWS issues a storm watch, the storm spot-command and prepare to ride out the storm. However, the storm spotters are not the only group called to action during a severe-weather watch. Personnel from emergency management, the Riley County Police Department, the Manhattan Fire Department and EMS meet at police headquarters to form the emergency operations center. Known as the EOC, this group forms the link between the NWS and the spotters in the field. "We watch radar and are in constant communication with both the spotters and the National Weather Service," Harrison said.

When tracking a storm, Tim Stoecklein, a veteran storm spotter, said it is essential to take the proper equipment.

"The necessities are radio equipment, an anemometer to measure wind speed, first aid kit and clothing for the weather," said Stoecklein, who is also the assistant director of the Peters Recreation Stoecklein said he also brings camera equipment and a laptop for mobile radar when spotting.

The posts the spotters use vary in designation, but Stoecklein said they are on public land. He said the scenic overlook on Kansas Highway 177 is a fre-

The assistant filmmaker of the documentary "Darfur Diaries: Message from Home," said he initially traveled to Sudan because the media refused to cover the atrocities there.

Adam Shapiro, who not only assisted in creating the film but helped with the production, said more than two million people have been forced from their homes, and about 400,000 civilians have been killed in Sudan since 2003.

"I couldn't believe nothing was being done by the media," he said.

Shapiro, who entered the country illegally to film because of the difficulty of obtaining a visa, gave a lecture and answered several questions after the film.

The film, showing only the messages and experiences of the victims of the Sudan genocide, was shown Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union Little Theater to inform students about what is

The documentary showed several interviews with Sudanese citizens driven from their homes by the government. It also showed the damage to villages in the region. Several villages were destroyed, and the residents forced to move to refugee camps or find shelter under trees.

He said even though the United States has recognized the situation as genocide and several aid organizations are moving into the region, circumstances are just as bad as they were when he visited Sudan in 2004.

Ethanol level in fuel could soon increase

By Brian Tosh KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Small towns and rural areas will see revitalization when the use of ethanol and other biofuels is expanded, former president Bill Clinton said during his March 2 Landon Lecture.

Many people now are talking about ethanol, and how the corn-based fuel will save Americans money at the gas

Environmentalists support it because it is better for the environment. conservatives support it because it provides energy independence and farmers support it because it brings oil profits to rural U.S. communities.

Ethanol is a clean-burning, highoctane fuel that is produced from renewable sources. At its basics, ethanol is grain alcohol, produced from crops like corn. It is comprised 95 percent from the starch of corn and five percent from sorghum, said Ron Madl, director of K-State's Bioprocessing and Industrial Value-Added Program.

Ethanol is being used as a gasoline additive to replace MTBE, the additive most commonly used in gasoline, Madl said.

Ethanol's popularity as an alternative fuel has reached all-time highs, said Mark Schrock, professor of biological and agricultural engineering. Earlier this year, President George W. Bush urged Americans to reduce gasoline consumption by 20 percent over 10 years by substituting alternative fuels, mainly ethanol.

With about 114 plants nationwide and 80 more on the way, the country's ethanol output was about 5 billion gallons last year and is expected to double by 2009, according to the Renewable Fuels Association, a trade group that promotes ethanol.

"What we are going through is one the most significant changes in the way we use energy that we have ever experienced," Schrock said. "The price of oil is higher than ever, but now we have the opportunity to take grain out of the food market and put it into the energy market."

Ethanol is a renewable fuel that can help extend the fuel supply, according to the American Coalition for Ethanol Studies, or ACE, on its Web site, www. ethanol.org. The ACE site showcases facts like 46 percent of U.S. gasoline now is blended with ethanol.

Ethanol fuel already is widely marketed in a mixture known as E-10, which is 10 percent alcohol fuel blended with 90 percent gasoline, and will run in a regular gasoline engine. The ACE Web site showed about 46 percent of U.S. gasoline contained some ethanol, most as E-10 blend.

One of the recent innovations, E-85, is mixture of 85 percent ethanol with only 15 percent gasoline, but requires a flex-fuel engine. The ACE reports there are more than 6 million flex-fuel vehicles in the United States, and automakers are rolling out more each year.

When E-85 is not available, these FFVs can operate on straight gasoline or any ethanol blend up to 85 percent. Madl said more locations are starting to offer E-85.

One of the most talked-about benefits of ethanol is its potential to help

Partner abuse comes in various forms

By Kristen Roderick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anyone with friends who are involved in a violent relationship should be patient with them, a clinical assistant professor of preventative medicine at the University of Kansas said.

Dr. Zita Surprenant asked the audience of about 100 people at her Tuesday afternoon lecture to raise their hands if they knew someone who was or had been in an abusive relationship.

About 60 percent of the audience members raised their hands.

"That's why I'm here," she said. "That gives you a good idea of how common it is."

Surprenant gave a lecture titled "Addressing Domestic Violence: Breaking the Silences" in Forum Hall. "I thought it was interesting, not only showing prevalence with the problem, but it was helpful on giving advice on how to help people in Terms of leaving their abusive partners," said Nathan Eilert, sophomore in criminal jus-

Sometimes women are scared for their lives and the lives of their families if they leave violent relationships, Surprenant said.

"Fear is a real barrier for women to disclose because they're scared," she said. You need to get them in Jouch with the crisis center in Manhattan."

Though students might become frustrated with friends who are in abusive relationships and do not get out, Surprenant said to stay support-

"Maybe he's punched you or called you a slut, so you go to your girlfriends," she said. "What do they say to you? 'Get rid of (him)."

It may not be that simple. An abusive man may give a woman flowers, leading the couple back into the honeymoon stage, where all is forgiven, Surprenant said.

"It's not like she hates everything in the relationship," she said.

But going back to the abuser could isolate the woman from friends and family, which could be what the abuser wants, Surprenant

Students said they realized the need to be supportive of their friends.

"Friends are trying to be helpful, but then say, 'I don't want to hear about it," said Katie Brunsman, sophomore in women's studies. "That could be more harmful than helpful."

Brunsman said people should be aware of the shelters in their communities, even if they are not in abusive relationships. However, locating shelters is sometimes hard to do.

"There are more animal shelters in this country than women's shelters," Brunsman

But there are other people who can help. The three people women go to when they are abused are friends and family, police and health-care providers, Surprenant said.

In a study of 445 cases of murder and attempted murder, doctors saw 42 percent of the women before the incident. Only 4 percent were seen in shelters, Surprenant

There is also help on the government level.

Kansas Attorney General Paul Morrison realized 50 percent of the crimes that make up the homicide rate involve intimate partner violence, so he is working to decrease it, Surprenant said. Morrison is working to establish a domestic violence unit within the criminal division of the Kansas Attorney General's office, according to his Web site.

He said the unit should help provide training for law enforcement officers, prosecutors, probation and parole officers, community corrections offices, victim and witness coordinators and others who help victims of domestic violence.

During the presentation, Surprenant also discussed the various forms of abuse, which are verbal and emotional abuse, intimidation and threats, isolation, economic abuse, sexual abuse and physical abuse.

Poker tourney to aid March of Dimes fund

By Logan C. Adams KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A poker tournament to raise money for premature infants will begin at 7 p.m. Thursday at Bobby T's Bar & Grill.

Tiffany Offett, a customer services representative for GTM Sportswear, said several GTM employees formed a team to raise money for March of Dimes, a nonprofit organization that works to help premature babies, prevent birth defects and lower infant mortality.

Offett said her group asked the managers of Bobby T's, who already hold poker tournaments twice a week, if they could organize a fundraiser. She said the managers agreed to be host to the event and donated a gift certificate for a prize.

The donation to buy in is nament.

$10 for $1,100 in chips for the night and $5 for every additional $500 in chips, Offett said. Participants will be limited to $5,100 in chips before the tournament starts.

Players who run out of chips in the first hour can buy their way back in with up to $2,000 in chips at the same rate, she said.

Offett said Bobby T's can accommodate 16 tables with eight or nine people per table playing poker. She said she expects about 80 people to come play.

"Anybody who has never played Texas Hold 'Em could learn a lot," said Lauren Tice, a marketing assistant for GTM who is also helping with the event.

Tice, junior in speech, said there should be good bar specials during the tour-

Corn producers and lobbyists have tremendous influence and money to toss about in Washington. The state of Iowa produced 2.2 billion bushels of corn in 2004, the highest in the United States, according to the Corn Refiners Association.

The 2008 election is approaching, and presidential hopefuls are aggressively courting the first primary caucus, which is in Iowa. Both parties are looking to curry favor and can do so by supporting the corn growers. But this political meandering has produced unintended consequences. When corn surpluses were high and prices were low, beef, pork and chicken farmers were able to buy grain cheaply and expand their operations. As corn supplies have tightened and prices have climbed, so too have the prices of consumer meats.

This is not to say we should not pursue fuel resources beyond petroleum products. Development of alternative fuels is a priority that will affect the world in the decades to come.

For this reason, we cannot support short-sighted efforts that show little promise and offer nothing more than political gain for a handful of people.

Until last week, the Walt Disney Company had limited its infamous Fairy Tale Wedding program at its Florida and California theme parks to couples with valid marriage licenses.

Now, couples - gay or straight - can exchange vows right in front of Cinderella Castle.

Beyond Disney's annual "Gay Days," when these family-oriented theme parks unofficially support gay couples, the company doesn't offer much to sexual minorities.

For this reason, Disney Parks and Resorts spokesman Donn Walker said the company wanted to expand its inclusive environment to guests of all backgrounds. While I don't expect to see any flamboyant "Mickey Mouse and Goofy" souvenirs joining the Disney family, I'd like to say kudos to the company for catching up with the rest of the United States. And starting at $8,000 to more than $45,000, these couples can make that declaration through a lavish wedding service just like any other fluffy, dream-at-heart heterosexual couple out there.

Aside from declaring their love, gay men and women gradually have pushed the envelope of American pop culture during the past 10 years.

Women like Rosie O'Donnell and Ellen DeGeneres have become icons in the gay community as some of the first women to publicly speak about their sexual orientation.

same (in fact, Christian Arabs call God "Allah"), yet their division has been the reasoning behind wars, massacres and death. So why do two sides fighting for the same God want to kill one another?

It all comes down to ignorance. If Muslims and Christians truly understood each other's religions, perhaps they would find they are not so different after all. There are dark, secret sects of both Islam and Christianity, but these groups form the minority of any faith.

More specifically, not all Muslims believe killing Christians will send them to heaven, where Allah will give them 72 virgins. And the majority of Christians do not subject themselves to corporal mortification or penance through physical self-punishment, using a flagellum or cilice, unlike the over-dramatic presentation of these in the movie "The Da Vinci Code."

In this time and age, Christian or non-Christian, we should never assume all Muslims or Arabs are suicide bombers or terrorists. The stereotype of the fanatical murdering Muslim simply is not correct.

In reality, according to the Everything Understanding Islam Book: A Complete and Easy-to-Read Guide to Muslim Beliefs, Practices, Traditions, and Culture" by Christine Huda Dodge, Arab Muslims only account for 15 percent of the entire world's Muslim population. The biggest concentration of Muslims is in Asia, at 69 percent. The "bad" people in this world do not only reside in the Middle East. We have many terrible people in the United States (Jeffrey Dahmer and John Wayne Gacy come to mind), but this does not mean all Americans are cannibals or serial killers in clown suits.

Most of the people in Iraq are only trying to survive the war happening in their country. They understand, unlike some Americans, that not all people from the United States are personally attacking their country or inflicting ill will upon them. They understand some Americans want to help them.

There are a lot of people in this world who are evil. They want to kill and harm others. But just because these evil people happen to claim they are doing God's work doesn't mean everyone else who reads the Bible or Quran has the same beliefs.

Stereotyping will never be a virtue, and I would assume God would love an Iraqi Muslim just as he would love an American Chris-SANTORINI, - Clean-up crews struggled to avert a major oil spill Tuesday on one of the Mediterranean Sea's most picturesque destinations after a sunken cruise ship leaked dozens of tons of oil off the resort island of Santorini at the start of the summer tourist season.

Greek engineers expressed hope they could prevent an environmental disaster as crews fought to siphon up fuel from the Sea Diamond, which went down Friday after hitting a submerged reef. A Prench passenger and his daughter are feared drowned, and nearly 1,600 people - mostly U.S. citizens - were safely evacuated.

CASABLANCA, Morocco - Police surrounded a building in Morocco's largest city where four terrorism suspects were holed up Tuesday, forcing three of the men to flee and blow themselves up with explosives. Police shot the fourth man as he apparently was preparing to detonate his bomb.

A police officer was killed in the operation, and a child was injured, officials said.

The explosions in Casablanca, weeks after the bombing of an Internet cafe in the city, promised to further rattle the North African kingdom, which had its first high-profile brush with Islamic terrorism in five suicide bombings in May 2003.

At least two of those killed Tuesday were suspected of links to those attacks.

ETHIOPIAN OFFICIALS ACKNOWLEDGE DETAINING 41 SUSPECTED TERRORISTS

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -Ethiopia conceded for the first time Tuesday that it detained 41 suspected terrorists from 17 countries but defended the action as part of the international war on terror groups and denied reports the prisoners were held incommunicado.

The statement came a week after The Associated Press reported that terrorism suspects had been transferred from Kenya to Somalia and then to Ethiopia. Ethiopian officials at the time denied any suspects were in custody, but U.S. officials said they had questioned some detainees.

Human rights groups called the detentions and transfers a violation of international law.

France and Australia also questioned Iran's claim of acquiring an industrial-scale nuclear fuel production capability.

Two U.N. inspectors have arrived in Iran to visit its uranium enrichment plant, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported. An official of Iran's Atomic Energy Organization confirmed their arrival and said the visit was "routine." The official spoke on condition of anonymity as he was not authorized to speak to the media.

BELGRADE, Serbia - Four paramilitaries seen in a video gunning down Bosnian Muslims near Srebrenica in 1995 were convicted of war crimes against civilians on Tuesday by Serbia's War Crimes Court.

It was the country's first court ruling related to the systematic killings of up to 8,000 Muslim men and boys in Srebrenica in the final months of the 1992-95 war in Bosnia - Europe's worst atrocity since World War II.

Trials of Serbs in Serbia only have become possible since the 2000 ouster of President Slobodan Milosevic, and the Srebrenica case has been a key test of the ability of Serbia's judiciary to deal with wartime atrocities.

First, it was meant as a reminder of the continuing war. So many forget Iraq is still a battle zone, and hundreds of thousands of people have died in our name and with our tax dollars.

Second, it was meant to inspire students to take action. Even after the November elections, Democrats do not have the willpower to get the troops home. It is Yet, even with a Democratic majority, there seems to be no end in sight.

So why not call it an antiwar protest?

When it was announced that Bob Huggins was going to be in charge of the K-State basketball program, I was disappointed.

I readily admit that I do not have a complete grasp on the financial significance of a winning sports team, but is it so important that we are willing to hire coaches known as much for their recruiting violations as their wins? K-State's willingness to hire Huggins, and those like him, seems a disgrace to coaches like Bill Snyder. who turned the Wildcat

Kansas' total property values increase

LINCOLN, Neb. - Many people in the state may see higher property tax bills even with no changes in their local tax levies. On average, the land many people own is worth more than it was last year.

The state Department of Property Assessment and Taxation released figures Tuesday showing that the value of real property in Nebraska increased about 6.5 percent from 2006 to this year, with most of the growth - 4.64 percent - due to higher values. The rest came from new construction.

Higher values often result in higher property taxes, unless local governments decrease their levies to offset increases. Property owners will also have the opportunity to appeal changes in valuations of their

Your health | Grilling tips

Temperatures affect food, grilling safety

Whether you're a weekend-only griller or an every-day grilling extraordinaire, there are some sizzling food-safety tips you'll need to keep in mind this summer when cooking up those tender T-bones and mouth-watering pork chops.

restaurant institution management and dietetics. "However, when grilling season arrives, people need to be especially alert with safe food-handling practices. Backyard chefs really need to think twice when it comes to safety. In addition to cooking temperature, proper time and temperature control of food during storage and transportation is one of the most significant contributors to food-borne illness during the summer months?

Bacteria begin to grow and multiply rapidly between 40 and 140 degrees Fahrenheit. Disease-causing bacteria are known to grow faster on raw meat and poultry products in warm, moist conditions, which makes the summer months ideal for bacteria growth. Keeping food products either cold or hot right up to the time of cooking and serving becomes a key action in prevention of illness.

"It wouldn't be any fun if you or your guests get sick," Sauer said. "Beyond that, I encourage people to experiment with different foods on the grill. Grilling is one of the oldest and most universal cooking techniques known. Enhancing food with smoky flavors and sizzle ... grilling offers endless opportunities to make summer eating a new adventure."

When grilling non-meat food items, like vegetables, first cut food into equal sizes to ensure quick and even cooking. Skewers for vegetable kabobs or grilling baskets also can be used for the grilling process.

"Vegetables take less time to grill than meat items," Sauer said. "Marinades can be used to enhance a particular flavor. Be careful not to marinate in the same solution used for raw meats. The flavor of grilled vegetables can be enhanced with a little oil and some simple herbs or seasonings prior to grilling."

Though grilling comes down to personal style and preference, the American Dietetics Association experts suggest these helpful tips to ensure a high-quality and safe product:

- Before you fire up the grill this summer, clean it. It only takes some hot, soapy water and a scrub brush. Also wash cutting boards and utensils in soapy water before and in between use.
- Thaw your meats properly. Start your meal right by thawing meats in a refrigerator set below 40 degrees Fahrenheit, in a microwave on the "defrost" setting or under cold water in your kitchen sink. When using the sink method, make sure the packaging is air-tight and change the water every 30 minutes.
- Eliminate bacteria in barbecue. Marinate meat in the refrigerator, never on the counter or outside by the grill. If you plan to reuse marinades, boil them to prevent the transfer of bacteria to other meats.
- Use a food thermometer. To further ensure food safety, cook your favorite foods to an internal temperature of at least 160 degrees Fahrenheit for beef and 170 degrees Fahrenheit for chicken.
- To decrease risk of food poisoning, don't leave food outside in temperatures more than 90 degrees Fahrenheit for more than one hour. If the temperature outside is less than 90 degrees but more than 40 degrees Fahrenheit, food should not be outside for more than two hours. If foods must be outside longer than one or two hours, keep it on ice.
- Moist towelettes or soap and water can be used to wipe off surfaces and hands that come into contact with raw meat products. This prevents the spread of bacteria to ready-to-eat food items.
- When storing food for later meals or snack time, be sure to chill items at less than 40 degrees Fahrenheit to prevent bacterial growth.

"It's always tough to play in Lawrence," said junior Olga Klimova. "It's KU. We want to beat them. We haven't lost to them in three years, so we definitely want to win that match."

K-State (4-11, 2-4 Big 12 Conference) travels to Lawrence today riding a two-match winning streak. The Wildcats will take on a Kansas squad with a similar record (4-12, 2-5 Big 12) which was last ranked by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association on Jan. 30. Kansas' four wins came against Drake, Utah, Iowa State and Nebraska. The Jayhawks do have a strong doubles team, which won in regional competition last year.

"Their No. 1 doubles team is pretty good," said coach Steve Bietau. "They won against Nebraska a few weeks ago. I think their singles lineup is pretty strong as well."

The last few matches for K-State are cleaner than they were earlier in the season, Bietau said.

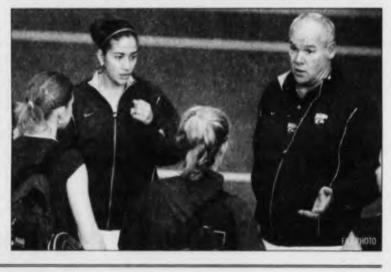

"It's not a question of being perfect," he said. "It's a question of improving. Fernanda (Da Valle) in singles played nine very clean games. Then Natasha (Vieira) in doubles, I saw three mistakes - three. When you start to play clean, it has an impact."

With the first two wins in 12 matches, Klimova said the team's confidence is beginning to rebuild.

"We haven't won for awhile, and winning always feels good," she said. "We got back on track after losing four Big 12 matches, which was good. I think the team is improving."

Da Valle, a junior from Cordoba, Argentina, agreed with Klimova.

'We're starting to play better than we were," Da Valle said. "We're adding confidence. We haven't gotten all of the confidence back, but I think the win on Saturday really helped us."

By Jonathan Garten KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When coach Ron Prince moved the football team's open practices for K-State students and faculty to Thursday nights, he didn't envision it being such a problem.

However, some strange Kansas weather forced the team to move its open sessions into the indoor practice facility on March 29 and April 5.

"That was a brilliant move, thinking that it would be 70 and sunny and the students and faculty could go out and enjoy a nice practice under the stars," Prince said at Tuesday's press conference. The young women, half of them freshmen and eight of them black, expressed incredulity at how someone they have never met could say such a thing about them.

"All of our accomplishments were lost ... we were stripped of this moment by the degrading comments made by Mr. Imus," said Heather Zurich, a sophomore forward.

Their reaction to meeting the man who insulted them might ultimately decide whether he keeps his job.

K-State white pages, Web site offer privacy settings

By Hannah Blick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first "frequently asked question" on the university Web site about the K-State white pages is, "What's the easiest way to find a person in the People Directory?"

Questions like this leave some students and faculty uneasy about their privacy when it comes to the availability of their addresses and phone numbers.

Though phone books have been around for many years, students have expressed concerns recently regarding privacy and the K-State campus phone book. It is possible to locate any K-State student, faculty member or administrator in the white pages, and searchers also can find phone numbers, e-mail addresses and local - and sometimes permanent - addresses for those they seek. The same information is also traceable through the search engine on the university Web site.

Pat Hudgins, co-production coordinator of the campus phone book, said all of the information printed in the annual phone book is released by the registrar's office, where it is stored.

The office gathers the information directly from students at the time of their enrollment each semester, but students do have the opportunity to omit certain pieces of information, like addresses and telephone numbers, if they wish to do so, Hudgins said.

Because faculty information is listed as well as student information, faculty members might have concerns of their own, but Hudgins said it is not something she thinks about, and she is not wor-

"It doesn't make me nervous to have my personal information listed," Hudgins said. "It is all public information anyway, and a resource for students to be able to contact a teacher if there is an emergency issue."

Wanda Allen, the other co-production coordinator of the phone book, said the phone book staff is providing a service to the campus by coordinating the information given them.

Student and faculty privacy concerning the K-State phone book is not an issue, she said.

"In today's world, everything is more risky," Allen said. "If somebody wants to get a hold of your information, they will, no matter what's in the campus phone book. But students do have the option to suppress their information."

Many students might not be aware they can withhold information from the online search engine or the white pages, but it is possible.

Akilah Mahon, senior in finance, said she changed her local address and cell phone number by logging on to KATS and updating her settings.

"It was very easy to take care of," Mahon said. "I didn't have to talk to anyone. If students feel their privacy is an issue, they need to take the initiative to get online and change their own information."

Mahon also said having a campus phone book is helpful when trying to locate other students for out-of-class assignments or group projects.

It also can come in handy when students need to talk to a teacher at the last minute about an assignment or test, like when they become ill and need to miss class, Mahon said.

Other students said they share Mahon's feelings toward the private information given out in the phone book. Josh Ault, senior in microbiology, said having his information in the phone book has not been a problem.

Other than a few pesky promotional phone calls that he said wasted his phone plan's minutes, he has not received any calls that would leave him concerned about having his number listed.

However, some might feel uneasy about listing a phone number or address that almost anyone can locate through the white pages or search engine, especially those who are unaware the information is even listed, he said.

Jessica Maddox, freshman in athletic training, said though having her number listed did not bother her too much, she was surprised to see her local address listed in the white pages. She said she was unsure about when she had approved that information to be listed.

Because the waiver to release contact information is filled out at enrollment, students might not realize while enrolling that they have signed the form.

"I think they should advertise this more at the time of enrollment," said Josefine Strandberg, freshman in theater. "Or maybe send out an e-mail or letter before the semester begins explaining how you can change or remove your personal information."

Elizabeth Unger, assistant provost, said students need to know they do have the power to add, remove, change or completely erase their profiles from the campus white pages and online search engine.

Unger also said there will be an updated version of the software used to piece together the search engine and phonebook, and it will be available in the fall.

With the new software, students will be able to make changes to their profiles beyond simply a name, address and phone-number listing, Unger said.

Changing your listing

Those who want to change their profiles for next semester's white pages should log on to their KATS accounts, where students will find an address/phone link under the "General Inquiry" column on the

From there students have the options of altering local, permanen emergency, and billing addresses and phone numbers.

Students enjoy warm weather by biking, skating to classes

Driving alternatives become more popular in spring time

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the recent cold temperatures are expected to rise, students soon will be able to ditch their vehicles and find other modes of transportation. The absence of snow and ice on campus often brings sights of people walking, skating, scooting and riding their bikes while soaking up the warm weather.

Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president of human resources and parking services, said he has seen the effects weather has on transportation, which is most evident in the parking lots.

On rainy days, he said, the parking lots are full of cars, but when the weather is nice, parking spots are more available.

"I would certainly think that with nicer weather, more of us would be inclined to walk," Leitnaker said.

According to the Parking Services Web site, students must follow the rules when they use these other modes of transportation.

The site encourages those skating through campus to be cautious and courteous to others and to wear appropriate equipment like helmets and pads.

When it comes to skating on campus, in-line skates and skateboards are permitted on university pathways designed for bicycle and pedestrian traffic, but skaters must yield the right-of-way to pedestrian and vehicular traffic, according to the site.

Mia Cosentino, junior in biology, said she uses her inline skates to get around campus more efficiently when the weather is nice.

"It saves me time," she said, "though I try not to skate when it's really windy. It's a pain."

Cosentino said she also does not like to skate in the rain. With the warm weather, she said she is able to skate to class, although she feels awkward at times, because she thinks she is one of the few people who choose to skate on campus.

"I've seen two people, and that's it," she said.

For class, Cosentino said she has to bring a pair of shoes into which she can change.

She said a disadvantage of skating on campus is she does not have brakes to slow down, which causes her to have to weave in and out of people.

"I'm sure some people don't like it," she said, "but I always manage to find my way around people."

Anikka Martin, sophomore in agricultural education, said she normally walks to campus, which is about 10 minutes from where she lives. However, on days with extreme weather or when she is tired, she calls a friend to come pick her up.

"In the cold, I don't like to walk," she said. "And when it is ridiculously hot in August, I don't like to, but I do it anyway. I do like to walk when it's a nice day, so I can get a little sun and fresh air."

According to the Parking Services Web site, students riding their bikes on campus also have rules to follow, including having a permit in order to park on campus. Bikes may not be ridden on lawns or planted areas and cannot be ridden on campus walkways from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, according to the site.

Students riding their bikes on campus also have to give pedestrians the right of way, follow vehicular laws and park only on approved bike racks.

Former band members reunite to form Fashionably Late, create new album

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly a decade ago, Pam Beihl and Bree Heitman attended one of their church's weekly choir rehearsals. Heitman had noticed the choir was performing a composition written by Behl. Heitman was intrigued and decided to introduce herself.

"I was very impressed, and so I went up and asked her if she had ever written anything else," Heitman said. "She looked at me and said, 'Yeah, I've got a little bit of other material.'

"I would soon find out that this 'little bit of material' was hundreds of

This interaction was the beginning of what would lead to the formation of Fashionably Late, a folk, pop/rock duo of two women who now have been a part of the local music scene for the last nine years.

"In a lot of ways it doesn't seem Tike it's been that long, but I guess it has been," Beihl said. "What I have enjoyed most about Bree's and my years of performing together is how close we've become, both as friends and musicians."

Soon after their initial meeting at choir rehearsal, Beihl and Heitman would start their first band, called Beihl and Hedman, which was Heitman's maiden name. The band mainly played the local coffeehouses and Teleases a debut album titled "Disre-Varding Popularity," in 1999.

The duo experimented with the addition of a drummer and bassist to Form a quartet called "The Big Idea." The band released a self-titled album in 2001, and the girls ventured outside of the Manhattan scene for the first man said. "We didn't just look like scared girls on a stage anymore."

After The Big Idea's breakup, Beihl and Heitman took a brief hiatus, but then reunited to form Fashionably Late, which Beihl declared was an ironic band name.

"It's safe to say that neither one of us is fashionable, and we're both very anal about late," Beihl laughed.

With the new band, the two perform on a more routine basis, playing at bars, coffee shops, street corners, living rooms, and backyard parties all over northeastern Kansas and continue to grow in popularity. The band also is looking to soon release the first Fashionably Late album, which is titled "Finally."

"We'd like to get the album out as soon as possible," Heitman said. "But we're not releasing it until we're completely satisfied with it. My guess would be within the next couple

Through the entirety of the their nine-year run, Beihl has sang lead and played guitar, while Heitman has added piano and provided backup vocals. Over the years, the two have fine-tuned their harmonies and perfected their gentle folk-style ballads, which Beihl says are inspired by the likes of Elvis Costello, Paul Simon and Ben Folds (though their MySpace. com Web page also credits Boulevard Wheat, the weather, Hello Kitty and croquet as their band's influences).

Having been around the Manhattan music scene for a number of years, the members of Fashionably Late said they have noticed significant changes in local music.

"The support for local music has grown tremendously over the last couple of years," Beihl said. "That definitely wasn't the case when we started out."

Heitman agreed.

"It's been great to see the improvements in the local scene," he said. "This growing interest is what makes us want to keep playing here."

Late, Heitman noted - among other potential goals - one expectation.

As far as the future of Fashionably

"To be rich and famous and quit our jobs, right?" Heitman laughed.

The duo's journey toward riches and fame will continue in Lenexa, Kan., this weekend before returning back to Manhattan to perform at the 4-20 Bash at O'Malley's next Friday. For more information about Fashionably Late, check out their Web site at MySpace.com/fashionablylatemusic.

Swedish bands excel; 'Cryptograms' misses mark

I'm From Barcelona "Let Me Introduce My Friends" ****

Twee-pop, a type of indie rock known for simple, sweet melodies and lyrics, is best left to the professionals. Too much sugar in the coffee, and the band will make the listener go into diabetic shock, but if there isn't enough sweetness, the music can come off as ironic, condescending and/or inauthentic. I'm From Barcelona, which actually is a band from Sweden, has 29 members and is led by Emanuel Lundgren. The band released its chipper, full-length debut in 2006, but it didn't hit the States until earlier this year. Singing about subjects like oversleeping, collecting stamps and building tree houses, I'm From Barcelona chooses to focus on the brighter side of life, both lyrically and musically. While it could be cloying to hear someone sing gleefully about getting chickenpox, proclaiming, "You can't have it once you've had it" ("Chicken Pox"), I'm From Barcelona is so charming it is nearly impossible to keep from humming the beautiful melodies created by this pop band.

The Knife "Silent Shout" ****

The Swedish brother-sister electronic duo of Olaf Dreijer and Karin Dreijer-Andersson (a.k.a. The Knife) has been on indie radar screens for the past couple years, especially with the success of single "Heartbeats," from the album "Deep Cuts." In 2006, The Knife released its first album in the United States - the cryptic and darkly demented "Silent Shout." Abandoning the sugary electro-pop tunes of the past, "Silent Shout" finds The Knife exploring new and interesting territory that breaks ground not only for the band but electronica, as well. The first few listens to "Silent Shout" can be alienating and strange, but repeated listens unveil layers of beauty and consistency that is absent in many full lengths. The synthesizers and beats are cold and mysterious, while the vocals by Dreijer-Andersson often are modified by a pitch-shifter, creating creepy, distorted vocals that range from high-pitched squeals to low, androgynous growls. This album is nothing short of a masterpiece.

Deerhunter "Cryptograms" ★★★☆☆

As much as I want to enjoy the second full-length from this experimental, psychedelic five-piece, I find it difficult to hear "Cryptograms" gel into a satisfying whole. The main complaint I have is that, though the band explores different genres and styles, it fails to string these songs into a coherent narrative. One example is the transition from the first track, "Intro," into the second, "Cryptograms." The former has cool washes of tonal synthesizer lines and interesting field recordings, while the latter consists of jittery percussion, an unrelenting bass line, spacey guitars and distorted vocals. Especially jarring is the transition from the album's first half to its second. The first contains spacious sound collages, while the second transitions into more poppy fare. Deerhunter excels in its musical explorations, so now all it needs is the ability to give those parts some regularity.

Mystery novelist Susan Wittig Albert recently released the 15th book in her China Bayles series called "Spanish Dagger." However, she did not speak at length about her books, but chose to talk about the history of mysteries and how she started her career as a writer.

Albert spoke about her career Tuesday evening at the Manhattan Public Library.

She said draws a lot of her inspiration from writers Gertrude Warner, the author of the Boxcar Children series; the pseudonym author Carolyn Keene, who Albert herself has written under to add to the Nancy Drew series; and Agatha Christie, who for a time wrote at least one new mystery novel

When she was young, Albert said she sold short stories she had written for children's magazines for one penny per word, and when she was not writing she spent the rest of her time

Manhattan residents Tom Mahoney and Charlie Clack, who were in attendance at the talk said that they had not read any of her books, but after hearing her speak they probably will start to follow her work.

"We heard about her coming to speak and thought we would come and check it out," Mahoney said. "After hearing her speak about her novels, I want to read some of the Victorian or Elizabethan era books."

DARFUR | Some regions too dangerous to send aid, filmmaker says

"Overall, the situation is getting worse," he said "There are not enough resources to maintain the amount of people in the region."

He said there are several reasons the situation is not improving.

Aid groups and troops are not being sent into some of the regions because of the dangers caused by fighting.

When countries send more troops to an area like Sudan, the countries often become more violent. Shapiro said. He cited the example of when U.S. soldiers entered Somalia in 1993. More than 1,000 Somali citizens had been killed in Mogadishu, the capital city, and the influx of soldiers increased violence in the area.

Even if the Sudanese militia were to quell the violence, he said, it would not be able to stop the killing and mistreatment.

"It's unlikely they would be able to do much," Shapiro said. "Their future is very bleak."

He said another reason for the lack of stability is the Sudanese government does just enough to not warrant international action. The Sudanese government is one of the leading countries in turning over international terrorists, so the United States does not always take the hardest stance toward

The final reason Shapiro addressed was how people in the United States have a misconception of the reasons for the conflict. He said Americans who are helping those in Sudan view the fighting as a conflict of races. He said the conflict actually dates back hundreds of years, and stemms from the history of land distribution and government ac-

Although the people of Darfur are receiving little help, Shapiro said there are several activities students can do to

"I encourage people to get involved in any human rights violations that spurs their interest," he said. "We need to show, as Americans citizens, that we stand up for human rights."

Tania Marines, freshman in anthropology, attended the event and said it is important for students to know about human rights violations.

"I think it is very important, especially for scholars, to be informed, because we are the future citizens who are going to have to deal with this," she said.

Marines said students need to help in Sudan. Because most students cannot travel to these areas, she said they should step back and look at the issue from a different perspective.

The event was sponsored by the Amnesty International group at K-State and the Union Programming Council. Sarah Mitts, president of the K-State chapter of Amnesty International and senior in management, said the group has sponsored several events to benefit Darfur the past few semesters, and promotes student involvement.

"As individuals with a voice there's so much people can do to stop the genocide in Darfur," Mitts said.

as one of the Wildcats' gunners on the punt team for K-State last year.

"We're concerned about this punt-return thing," Prince said, "because it's a different skill. Catching a punt is different than catching a kickoff. Not only tracking it off the bat but also recognizing the tip of the ball, whether it's up or down and how that might affect how far it's going to go ... it's a little more skillful position than kickoff return, and the defenders are likely to be on or around you as you catch it, so it takes a little more courage and anticipation."

Prince said Josh Moore, Cedric Wilson, Byron Garvin and Leon Patton are splitting time fielding punts.

versatil-Despite his ity, Prince said Jordy Nelson probably would not be in the mix to return punts.

"If you put the best player all things being equal - at each position, then you have two or three names come up all the time," Prince said. "We do need to build some versatility so that when we have a situation where they can't play, we're not caught short."

rural America. Madl said ethanol plants produce jobs and provide an economic benefit.

A 2005 report from the Nebraska Public Power District showed a typical 40 million-gallon ethanol plant will expand the local community's economic base by $70.2 million each year, create at least 33 full-time jobs at the plant and at least 120 jobs in the local economy.

But as the farmers who grow corn catch up to the demand, ing the pinch.

"The farmers who are growing com have seen their prices increase," Madl said. "But the cattle and hog feeders are paying a much higher price."

Schrock said he agreed. The agricultural and food industries are in a state of adjustment, trying to figure out how to use the increase in demand, he said.

"The livestock producers will bear the brunt of some of this change from the food chain to the fuel chain," he said.

However, Madl cautioned against the hope that ethanol can replace foreign oil entirely.

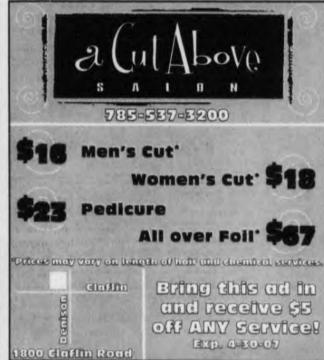

"There are 5 billion gallons of ethanol produced a year," Madl said. "But this is nothing compared to the 140 billion gallons of total gas the United States uses each year." Madl said cellulosic ethanol could increase production growth by 12-15 billion gallons a year. Cellulosic ethanol can come from the residues from agricultural processing, wheat bran, soybean holes, corn stalks, wheat straw and even switch

Students can find options for one-day road trips throughout the state that require just one tank of Chuck Martin, associate professor of geography, had some suggestions for traveling in Kansas.

Martin said he thought three hours was the maximum traveling distance to fit in activities for a one-day road trip.

"When I was in graduate school, we did things like this as sort of a tour," he said.

Clint Patry, junior in agronomy, said he has gone on road trips with his friends and most recently traveled to sand dunes in Oklahoma.

"It's just to get away and get out of town," he Patry said he usually takes a camera, plenty to drink and sometimes a map, although he usually travels to places that are familiar to him.

Paige Domoney, freshman in family studies and human services, said she took a two-day road trip over spring break to Soldier, Kan. She said leaving without set plans made her trip both exciting and interesting.

"Everything that could have gone wrong went wrong," Domoney said.

Student, faculty teams compete in rodeo-style olympic events

By Whitney Hodgin KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty-four teams of K-State students and faculty tested their skills in rodeo- and farm-themed games at the eighth-annual Cowboy Olympics on Wednesday night in Weber Arena. The teams of four participated in five timed events including post riding, fake calf roping, climbing over a hay bale, and pushing a Ford F-250 about 20 yards across the arena.

Cowboy Olympics was part of Ag Fest, a five-day series of agriculturalrelated activities sponsored by the Agricultural Student Council.

About 200 people came to compete and cheer on the teams, which had names like Foodies with Boobies, Spurs and Cuffs, and Shake and Bake.

Megan Sramek, a junior in agricultural business, has participated in Cowboy Olympics for three years in a row. Her team, Them One Girls, dyed shirts to stand out.

"We used Kool-Aid to tie-dye them," Sramek said, offering a whiff of her

Heightened oil prices help Kansas economy

By Ben Hedges KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While consumers might not appreciate spending more money to get from point A to B because of increased gasoline prices, businesses within the oil industry and the Kansas economy in general are thriving thanks to the rise in oil prices.

Jon Callen, President of the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, said the rise in oil prices within the past few years has been beneficial to the state of Kansas and its businesses.

"The oil industry is one of the two largest economic engines for the state of Kansas," Callen said. "And when the oil industry does well, the Kansas economy does well."

The economy benefits from increases in property and payroll taxes and royalties given to landowners where drilling takes place. Most of the benefit, however, comes from the amount of spending from businesses and property owners who make more money.

Callen said businesses in the oil industry experience the benefit indirectly, in a trickle-down effect beginning with the drilling of the oil.

"Those who benefit first are the people that have the oil in the ground and produce it," he said.

The development works its way to refineries that spend more money on oil storage and refining technology because of increased drilling, and finally to smaller businesses that market the oil and supply equipment for oil drilling.

Brian Baalmann is the general manager of KBK Industries in Rush Center, Kan., a privately owned business that manufactures fiberglass tanks for oil field use and other equipment that separates oil from water.

He said business has been good in the year he has worked for KBK.

Bluemont Elementary School will reopen this fall for the first time in several years. The school is undergoing various projects to repair problems the building developed since its closing.

By Austin Apple KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This fall the hallways of Bluemont Elementary School will be filled with students for the first time in five

The Board of Education voted to reopen the school last fall, said Michele Jones, communications coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD

This is the first time in the past 10 years the number of students at the elementary level has increased, Jones

"We will be receiving more elementary-aged students as military families move in," she said.

To get the school ready for the fall, maintenance workers have been performing various repair projects, said Robert Seymour, associate superintendent of USD 383.

"Right now, we have painters repainting the interior of the building," Seymour said, "We have completed a substantial amount of the interior."

Some roof repair has been done, and drainage problems have been corrected around the building. Playground equipment will be installed as

Seymour said the school also is adding new desks for both the students and the teachers, as well as file

The school originally was built in 1910. In 1951, kindergarten rooms were added, and in 1983, the old gym was remodeled into a library, a new gym was added on, and office areas were built, he said.

Kathy Stitt, the school's principal, said she planned some events in honor of the reopening. A Family Fun Night on May 18 will include games and prizes, she said, and an Open House will take place sometime in August.

New parents can ask questions and get familiar with the school at a parent orientation night at 6 p.m. May 9, Stitt

A community clean-up day is planned so people from the community can come and plant flowers and spruce up the playground, she said.

"We will have some K-State students coming to help with various projects," Stitt said.

Test your knowledge of trivia, entertainment and yourself

Do you know your geography?

By Stephanie Gorges KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You might know K-State students come from all 105 Kansas counties and all 50 states. But did you know K-State is also home to students from more than 100 countries around the world?

This week is International Week - your chance to learn about and celebrate the cultures and traditions of your fellow students. Test your basic knowledge of your classmates' origins by identifying the following numbered countries, all of which are home to at least one K-State student. Then find out more about each country during the week's activities.

1. Countries 1, 2 and 3, in order, are a. Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. b. Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama.c. Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica.

2. Countries 4 and 5, in order, are

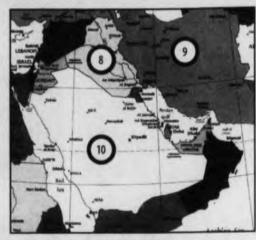

a. Indonesia and China.

b. Malaysia and China. c. Nepal and China.

3. Countries 6 and 7, in order, are

a. India and Malaysia.

b. India and Thailand. c. Indonesia and Thailand.

4. Countries 8, 9 and 10, in order, are

a. Iraq, Iran and Saudi Arabia. b. Iran, Iraq and Pakistan.

c. Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Pakistan.

5. Countries 11, 12 and 13, in order, are

a. Ecuador, Brazil and Armenia. b. Ecuador, Brazil and Argentina. c. Venezuela, Brazil and Argentina.

1 right: If you can't even identify countries on the map, you probably know even less about their traditions and lifestyles. Try to participate in some International Week activities to gain a broader understanding of your classmates' cultures.

2-4 right: You know your geography, but do you know anything else about these countries? Be open to conversation with international students on campus, and take advantage of the remaining activities during International Week.

5 right: Either you're a geography major or you're internationally minded. Use your world knowledge to get to know students from outside the United States, and use International Week to take part in their cultural activities. Answers: 7-8, 2-c, 3-b, 4-8, 5-c

International Week participants learn, practice cultural dances

By Kristin Hodges KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students danced to a different beat as they learned moves from various cultures Wednesday night in the K and S ballrooms of the K-State Student Union. The lessons were part of International Week.

Yuka Yamamoto, senior in psychology, organized the international dance lessons along with the International Coordinating Council.

"Since there are so many international organizations that do great dances, it's an opportunity to show them," she said

The dance leaders started their sessions by demonstrating to the participants, and eventually, everyone completed the dances together. Members of the Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club performed first while dressed in purple robes. Some even had their faces painted.

The participating dancers used Japanese castanets and learned the Yosakoi dance in parts before performing it to music. The choreographed included dance freestyle moves and vocal parts.

Seiji Ikeda, director of the Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club, said the club comprises elementary students, K-State students and alumni and community members who are Japanese, American and several other nationalities.

Ikeda, graduate student in fine arts, said the dance means, "join us and have a good time," and the club performs both serious and energetic dances.

He said Yosakoi educates people about Japanese culture and diversity.

"The main purpose of the style is to encourage the audience, whether to dance or in spirit," he said.

However, there are some weekends when students just need an escape - some time to blow off steam. And by "blow off steam," we do not mean playing Halo 2 in your darkened basement for nine hours.

Kansas, despite what most of us probably believe, actually has sights (and sites) worth seeing.

For example, less than 40 miles south of Manhattan is the town of Council Grove, Kan., a stop on the historic Santa Fe Trail. An old-timey downtown district features small shops, an apothecary with a soda fountain and several photo-worthy landmarks.

If you are interested in a slightly longer trip, you can jump in the car and head to Lucas, Kan., where Civil War veteran Samuel Perry Dinsmoor built a cabin and "Garden of Eden" all of cement and limestone. For a small fee, visitors can view this extreme art.

The point is, get out.

Kansas is full of monuments and landmarks, both historical and quirky (see World's Largest Prairie Dog in Oakley, Kan.), and there is no reason to sit around and waste time on Facebook.com when you can go sightseeing with Split the cost of gas, buy lunch on the road, and you've got a fun-filled road trip - all in a day.

The trip is bound to give you more than just something to do; there will be inside jokes and candid photos aplenty.

Mean girls

Relationships between women often filled with gossip, backstabbing

I am a believer in keeping your friends close and your enemies closer. This is especially true when dealing with members of my gender.

I have come to the sad realization that in too many cases you just can't trust girls anymore. While a million brokenhearted guys are probably cheering in agreement, it unfortunately has gone far beyond the realms of relationships and has sunk right into female bonding.

It seems more and more like life is becoming one big "Mean Girls" movie. Girls aren't interested in each other sheerly for friendship. They want competition and a way to meet more guys.

I have very few close female friends. The ones I do have are mostly from my grade school days, and I trust they genuinely care about me. Too many of the girls I have met since then do not.

There have been girls that have used me for whatever reason, smiled at me then talked behind my back, ditched me and hit on my boyfriends. One special girl tried to talk my boyfriend out of dating me.

What's sad is all of these girls have pretended to be my friend. Perhaps they even believed they were, but their actions spoke louder. In spite of all they do, I - and all other girls in my position - are forced to grin and take it. As much as these she-devils do to make my life difficult, the situation only would grow worse by my muddying the waters. Seek revenge on a witchy girl, and you can bet the retaliation will be even worse. Does me as a hypocrite? I don't think so - I think I simply am protecting myself. As long as I know what they have done and what they are doing but choose not to disclose my knowledge, I have the upper hand. I have the ability to watch them with a suspicious eye and write about them discreetly in a newspaper, while smiling and acting as though our relationship is all sunshine and butterflies. Why do girls do this to each other? If a guy had a problem with a friend's girlfriend or the friend himself, he would just say so. I wish girls could take this approach. Instead, they (myself included sometimes). choose to back stab and double cross each other while not even dropping their smile. The female population is missing out on opportunities by not standing together. Sure, some people are just destined not to get along, but more often than not, women have a lot more in common than they think. We go through a lot of the same things and feel a lot of the same feelings, and a lot of strong friendships and support could come from that.

But we choose not to take advantage of this. Women hurting other women is a life-long issue. Will it get better? Probably not. Especially as the years progress and competition for jobs and men become more fierce - I think it will only get worse._ I suppose that leaves .

my ever-dwindling group of nice girls to keep on smiling and looking out for ourselves. And though they're not the clothes-sharing, giggling tight female relationships of which we all dream, I guess there are always guy friends.

Good luck fitting them into your shoes, though.

Students can help end poverty from computers

Jay Nargundkar THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. - This past week, I became an investor in a small butcher shop in Agsu, Azerbaijan.

It took just 10 minutes, and I didn't even get up off of my couch. I hope I can persuade you to do something similar.

You see, most college students, myself included, often think we as individuals can't do much when it comes to tackling a big problem such as world poverty. It's the kind of issue where creating Facebook. com groups, wearing colored wristbands, attending rallies on McKeldin Mall, and yes, writing in The Diamondback don't have much of a real-world impact.

Time and money are generally what it takes to make a difference. and college students are short on both. Bill Gates and Warren Buffett don't have to worry about paying for tuition, housing and drinks at Cornerstone. And students don't have much time to think about changing the world between classes, internships, homework, parties, the gym and so forth.

That's why it was with great interest I read New York Times writer Nick Kristof's recent column, "You, Too, Can Be a Banker to the Poor." He wrote about a Web site called Kiva (kiva.org), which allows anyone to make direct loans through PayPal to specific entrepreneurs in Third World countries.

It's an example of the realworld impact of microfinancing - the poverty-fighting tool popularized by Nobel Peace Prize winner Muhammad Yunus. Small loans (typically a few hundred dollars) are given to poor people, especially women, who traditionally have little access to capital. The interest rate charged is lower than that of commercial institutions in that country, yet allows the donor revenue to finance his operations. Witness the power of capitalism being harnessed to save lives.

Kiva allows you to look at the business proposals and credit histories of entrepreneurs from Honduras to Afghanistan. Projects include anything from store owners wanting to increase their inventory to mechanics needing auto parts. If you find one you like, you can instantly transfer them money via PayPal - the same safe, secure payment mechanism used on eBay and other leading Internet sites. What I think is best is that none of this involves a large amount of money on your own part. Lenders can donate just $25 each toward a project, so the loan comes from a group rather than you alone. It's philanthropy on the cheap.

Plus, you know exactly who your money is going to and how it is being used. Kiva, it should be noted, boasts a 100 percent repayment rate to date.

My first loan went to an Azerbaijani man named Ilham Abdulov, who owns a small butcher shop in a bazaar in the city of Agsu. He's a young, portly, jovial-looking guy who has run his shop for four years. Ilham needs money to buy more animals so he can expand his business. He has agreed to pay me and the other lenders (several from across the U.S., but also one from Spain and another from Japan) back in 12 to 16 months.

Now of course I don't mean to suggest ending poverty is just a few mouse clicks away or that we should focus on the "sexier" international aid at the expense of tackling problems here at home. But programs like Kiva offer us college students an easy and affordable way to help people and become involved in humanitarian

If a lack of time and money aren't an excuse, then what are you waiting for?

Coaches should be in it for players, not paychecks

I don't know about you, but try as he might, Bob Huggins did not manage to break my heart.

In fact, I and other blissfully basketballignorant creatures weren't even entirely sure who Bob Huggins was before last week.

the chatter about

blacking out Bramlage, and we frowned in confusion at the T-shirts we saw in the Union that inexplicably misspelled "Aggieville," but basketball made relatively small ripples in our lives.

And then good ol' Bob had to up and dump our school, tossing you and me into a sea of basketball statistics, press conferences and bitter grumbling around the lunch table as people read their Collegians and gnashed their teeth.

But Huggins' abandonment of K-State did more than just prompt students to doodle Hitler moustaches on his photograph in the papers littering the campus. This column isn't about him, which I imagine is a relief to you at this point.

I only mention Bob because his untimely departure raised interesting questions about what responsibilities these college coaches really have to their schools, students, and most importantly, to their players.

Coaches at the professional level of sports swap teams like fourth graders exchange lunches. In the end, their decisions are primarily motivated by personal gain. Their choices are seen as cold, hard business deals intended to score them higher pay or better

But should coaches of college teams take the same approach to their work?

College-level sports are supposed to teach players, helping them to achieve their highest potential in order to set them up for possible careers. Unlike the professional players out there who treat their sport like a business and get paid handsomely for it, college players still are learning the ropes.

In light of this, a college coach is more of a mentor and a guide to his players than a professional coach has the opportunity to be. He or she has personal responsibility for the instruction and welfare of the players.

Ideally, a coach should be a constant figure in their early athletic careers, steering them toward

To build a relationship with and make a promise to these players and simply abandon them later is: more than a little unconscionable. I don't know how you can expect a team to trust you and perform well if you might disappear at any Considering these players can make or break coaching careers, it is still fully within the interest of these coaches to treat them well in return.

Probably most important, players are not the only ones hurt by flip-flopping coaches. Coaches of college sports also are held in high regard by the students who are pouring money they certainly don't have into these athletic programs.

If the Huggins situation isn't enough to convince you, I offer the example of my own household. My mom, a Minnesota University alumna, still forbids the mention of former football coach Lou Holtz in our home. When she was a student, Holtz promised her Golden Gophers the world in exchange for some costly upgrades to their school, and after these changes were made, he took a better offerat the last minute.

His decision certainly was not; just business to those players and

A coach for a professional team can come and go as he pleases, but it seems these college coaches, who develop such deep relationships with us and are so personally welcomed, potentially owe us all a lot more.

Heck, at the very least, a decent

Whole-grain foods might benefit long-term health

By Eric Brown KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

According to human nutrition and grain science experts at K-State, one food source possibly can prevent many health problems and satisfy hunger at the same

These experts are speaking of whole-grain foods, which they say may help prevent heart disease, cancer, gastrointestinal problems, constipation, diabetes and high blood sugar.

"It's incredible what health benefits are possible with whole-grain foods and that you also don't have to sacrifice any taste," said Mary Meck Higgins, associate professor of human nutrition.

Higgins noted unfortunately, whole-grain foods are less common than refined-grain foods. Refined grains are the result of removing the germ and bran from whole grains during the milling process, Higgins said.

"This is done because refined grains can be preserved longer without the germ," said Higgins, who has studied research and taught classes concerning wholegrain foods for seven years. "However, by losing the germ and bran, a lot of nutritional value is lost during this process."

According to a K-State Research and Extension Web site, the most common types of whole grains are brown rice, oatmeal, pearl barley, popcorn and wild rice.

Higgins said a person should strive to eat three to five servings of whole-grain foods per day but also said it is rare that people do.

"I think a lot of people have the misconception that whole-grain foods take long to prepare and become discouraged with trying wholegrain foods," Higgins said. "But instant brown rice is very quick and easy, as are many breakfast cereals that have whole grains and also popcorn."

But though time and preparation might not be problem, Higgins said there are other difficulties in attempting to add whole grains to one's diet.

"Whole-grain foods can be hard to identify," Higgins said. "You often times have to investigate the ingredients label to find out if it's whole grain or not. In my opinion they should put that information where it's obvious."

Higgins has another concern for potential wholegrain food consumers.

"I don't want people who are trying to find wholegrain foods to spend money on something they think is whole-grain but isn't," Hig-

Higgins explained many people will buy multi-grain or stone-ground foods, expecting the same nutritional values as whole-grain foods.

"The problem with multigrain foods is that only some - or maybe even none - of the grains in the food may be whole grain," Higgins said.

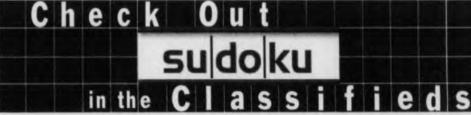

"This product may have a variety of refined grains, but it's not the same. It doesn't have near the same health benefits. Companies mislead consumers to believe that multi-grain products have the same nutritional content as whole-grain foods."

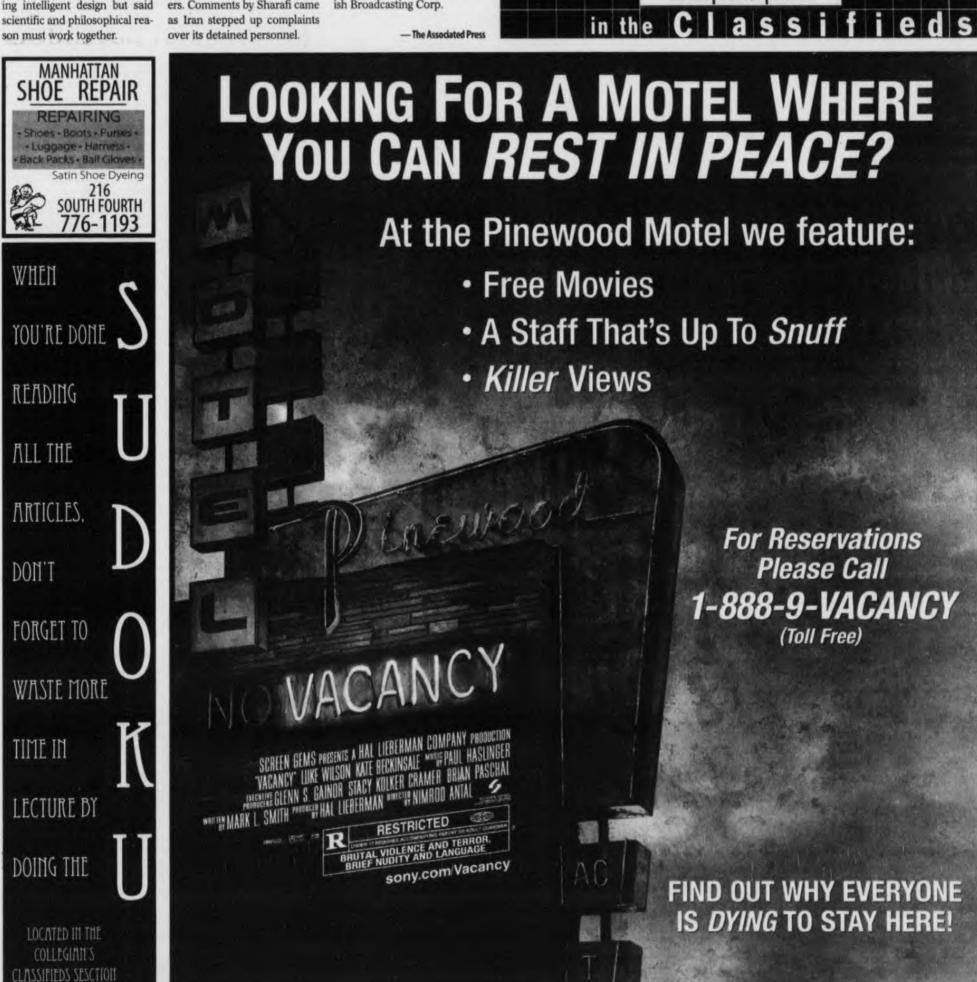

While it has been proven whole grains are second to no other grains as far their nutritional advantage, grain and nutrition experts at K-State are looking for ways to even better the health benefits of whole grains.

"For example, right now we are researching how wheat could have a higher antioxidant content," said Ron Madl, administrator of Grain Science and Industry.

Madl, who has been a part of grain researching for 10 years, noted the antioxidants of whole-grains, like wheat, contribute to the cancer-fighting capabilities of whole-grain foods.

"One of our main goals in our research of wheat and other grains is to utilize and improve their value from a nutritional standpoint."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cats nearly shut out by Creighton

By Cedrique Flemming KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Justin Bloxom came up to the plate to bat left-handed in the bottom of the eighth inning and saw that Pat Venditte, the only switch pitcher in college baseball this year, was going to throw left-handed.

Once a pitcher decides which arm he is going to pitch with, the batter has the right to change, and that's exactly what Bloxom, the switch-hitting designated hitter for the K-State baseball team, did.

He moved to the right side of the plate to give himself an advantage over the Creighton pitcher, and it paid off.

Bloxom, a freshman, drilled a home run over the right field wall to give the Wildcats (22-11) their only run of Wednesday night's 3-1 loss at Tointon Family Stadium.

Sophomore Byron Wiley went 2for-3 in the game and was the only Wildcat with more than one hit. He recorded a triple with two outs in the fourth and K-State trailing 2-0, but sophomore Nate Tenbrink lined out to left field to end the potential threat. Tenbrink went 0-for-2.

We always think we can start a rally, but it just didn't happen tonight," Wiley said. "We should've had more than five hits, but that just happens sometime. I mean, it was a cold night tonight, and I guess we couldn't get warmed up."

In addition to poor hitting, the Wildcats also had eight strikeouts.

Senior Eli Rumler went 1-for-4, freshman Adam Muenster finished 1-for-2 and Bloxom went 1-for-4 for K-State's only other hits.

"Offensively, we just didn't do much," said coach Brad Hill. "We couldn't get on top of the ball very well, and we hit a lot of weak fly balls and struck out eight times. That wasn't a very good offensive output by us."

Creighton (20-11) plated two runs in the first inning. Robbie Knight struck out to begin the game, and Chad Ogden flied out to center, but the Wildcats had trouble recording that final out.

K-State starting freshman pitcher A.J. Morris hit Chris Gradoville with a pitch, and Darin Ruf followed that with a single. Andrew Small came up next and hit the tri-Michelle Regan was an involved high-school athlete, playing softball, soccer, basketball and golf.

Regan's high-school success has followed her to the K-State women's golf team, where her impressive drives and effective short game have landed her the number one spot on the team.

Regan posted her 11th career top-20 finish and her third top-10 finish of the season last weekend at the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic in Norman, Okla.

She also managed to set a 54hole personal best of 216 while carving her name in the K-State record books, tying former Wildcat Christine Boucher for the fifth-best 54hole score.

Regan, a winner of the state softball title her sophomore year of high school, was not fully focused on golf in her younger years.

"I played second base in softball, and I was a goalie in soccer, but I decided that it would be easier to play golf in college than any of the alternatives," Regan said. "I was looked at by Iowa State, Creighton and Louisville for softball and some smaller Division II schools for soccer."

K-State Vice President for Institutional Advancement Bob Krause was the first person to suggest to coach Kristi Knight the possibility of recruiting Regan.

Regan's father, Gary, a friend of Krause, was already familiar with the K-State golf program.

"I first met Michelle her senior year of high school here in Manhattan, when she was playing a tournament," Krause said. "She seemed like a driven young person that would fit well with the K-State program."

Knight said she receives several leads a year from various sources and follows up on most of the opportunities.

"Bob said to me that there is a somewhat unknown girl in Kansas City, so I decided I would take a look at her," Knight said. "She was a somewhat raw talent, but I was drawn to her athletic ability and competitive nature. I could see that from the first day I watched her."

Regan will be back in action with the Wildcats at the Big 12 Championship on April 16-18 at Ridgewood Country Club in Waco, Texas.

The Kansas Spring Tournament officially vill open the water-ski season for the team. There will be one more tournament in lowa the following weekend, which will wrap up the spring competition.

"Our main competitive season is in the fall," Cless said. "These tournaments are kind of a way to get back into it."

In the fall semester, the team will compete in at least three tournaments, with one in Missouri and the other two near Chicago.

The club has a traveling team, which competes in tournaments, as well as a recreational team that skis for fun. People of all skill levels are allowed to ski with the team for fun. The team holds meetings every Monday at 9 p.m. at Union 213.

TEN | K-State beats Kansas, picks up 3rd-straight win

The women's tennis team kept its momentum going Wednesday in Lawrence, beating Kansas 5-2 and increasing its winning streak to three matches.

The Wildcats won the doubles point, winning two of three matches. The pairing of junior Tamar Kvaratskhelia and freshman Natasha Vieira beat KU's Stephanie Smith and Yuliana Svistun, 8-4, and juniors Viviana Yrureta and Fernanda Da Valle beat Elizaveta Avdeeva and Edina Horvath, 8-4.

"We were a little stronger than them, and as the matches went on, we got stronger," said coach Steve Bietau. "It was an upset at No. 1 doubles for us to win there.

In singles, four of the six K-State players were victorious. Yrureta won at No. 1 singles over Avdeeva, 6-4, 6-3, and Da Valle won at No. 2 singles over Horvath, 6-2, 7-6(6). Freshman Katerina Kudlackova sealed the K-State victory with a win at No. 4 singles over Hommell, 6-4, 6-1, and Vieira added to the final score by defeating Smith at No. 6 singles, 6-4, 6-4.

"The singles matches were a lot tougher than they appear," Bietau said. "Viviana's match was in straight sets. There were a lot of long, hard points. Fernanda's match was the same way. Fernanda's playing with a lot of confidence right now. She looks like she can beat anybody." Junior Olga Klimova forfeited her singles match because of a knee injury in the fourth game of her first set.

From coming off of a 10-match losing streak to winning three straight, Bietau said he can see a definite increase in morale on the team.

"It's been a gradual progression, but I would have to say that the confidence is increasing," he said. "We've got some tough matches ahead ofus, but I think we're getting more confident."

Student seeks clothing to donate as part of plans to help AIDS orphans in Uganda this summer

By Lacey D. Mackey KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Katie Whitney, sophomore in anthropology, is taking a trip across the Atlantic Ocean and a step toward changing the world.

This summer, Whitney will travel to Jinja, Uganda, to work with an organization called Save the AIDS Orphans. For 50 days, Whitney will work at an orphanage especially for children with AIDS. She also will offer her assistance at a school and program the organization runs for widows facing welfare problems.

"I'll just be doing whatever they need me to be doing," she Whitney said she heard about the program from her best friend, who is in Africa working at a different orphanage. Whitney found the organization on a Web site, asked her friend to check it out and began talking to a pastor who works at the organization in Uganda.

Whitney said she has done a lot with a similar organization called Invisible Children, a group founded to raise awareness and help for the children of north Uganda forced to become soldiers in the country's civil war. Whitney became inTO HELP

Milford Lake to be host of ESPN fishing tournament

The ESPN Bass Club World Championship Tournament will take place at Milford Lake this weekend.

The tournament on April 13 and 14 will feature some of the top bass anglers from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri. Rick Dykstra, assistant director at the Geary County Convention and Visitors Bureau, said the states are sending in teams.

"The top six teams with the heaviest weigh-in will advance to the national championships, and each team member of the number one team will receive around $1,000 each," Dykstra said.

He said each team consists of three boaters and three non-boaters. The three boaters are anglers with their own boats, and the non-boaters are anglers who fish on other people's boats. Dykstra said it is very exciting to have ESPN at Milford Lake because it is very difficult to earn a lake

"The Kansas folks think they have an advantage - they better watch out because it's the ones who aren't from here that aren't afraid to explore." Dykstra said.

The tournament is open to anyone wishing to watch. The boats will launch at first light each tournament day at the south boat ramp and parking lot area. The Milford State According to www.espn. Park Office said the fee for a

'Moon Dancer'

Local woman finds comfort in plants, poetry

By Timothy A. Schuler KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dark bits of rose - the constant tone of her lips - accent drooping earth-tone walls. Vines, long and dead, are preserved by the perpetual shade of the drawn curtains. She holds a page of scrawled calligraphy, the writing long and spindly, the A's in capital letters. "Moon Dancer" it says near the top.

"I will not captivate you with flamboyance."

The simplicity of East Asian culture traces the hall, her bed resting directly on the floor.

The evening sun is directed thinly down the drapes, hitting the wooden floor near her feet. "Light illumines me with elegant strength." Wendy Adams, manager at Westside Market, never has known how to describe herself. She said these lines, from a poem she wrote about 10 years ago, are her truest attempt to put herself into words: "I will perfume your skin with whispers of ancient sweet earth mysteries."

The smell of incense and decade-old smoke permeate the small living room.

Her poem describes not only herself, but a plant called Artemisia, which looks like silver, feels like velvet and, when touched, is soothingly fragrant.

The enigmatic tone of the poem is reinforced by Adams' appearance. Even indoors, she often wears a pair of 30year-old sunglasses, dark with large lenses and gold rims. The glasses aren't just a piece of the persona - they are her only protection against light-induced migraines.

Her personal life is as mysterious as the eyes behind the lenses. She lives between worlds on a path woven between normal human life and the everlasting energy of plant

"I am of nature," Adams said. "I am drawn to things in the natural world."

Adams' interest in plant meditation - the examination of the spiritual nature of a plant and the energy between it and the human body - and natural medicine has grown over the last two decades, a period Adams said she never planned to spend in Manhattan.

Adams said 20 years ago, she was wandering about the country with few long-term plans. She said Manhattan's array of local vendors - a coffeehouse with a comfortable atmosphere, a market with local produce and plants and a restaurant that has since closed - embodied a sense of community that appealed to her.

Now the manager at the market she then frequented, Adams' first concern and joy is taking care of plants.

"It takes energy, but it's energizing," she said.

Sitting barefoot in her apartment, Adams confessed spring does bring a level of responsibility that can take away from her personal interests.

"There are times I feel like I'm attending everyone else's garden and not my own," she

She said her pastime, container gardening, begins near the end of April. She said she enjoys the process - planning, buying the plant material and arranging it - as much as the end product.

"It's a visual experience for me in the beginning," Adams said. "It's a combination of all the performing arts."

She described the sound of watering as music, the formation of the blossoms as a painting and the planting process as

"It's an art form," she said. "If you have any sense of art, you can approach it in that way."

Born and raised in Holcomb,

Kan., Adams said she nearly suffocated in what she felt to be such a small, cultureless town.

"I found it very claustrophobic as a youngster," she said. "I didn't have an awareness of 'I need more art, but I just felt there was something more."

Adams said she looked for that "something more" on a long, winding road trip to Canada two years after high school. She and a group of friends made the journey in a blue-and-white 1951 Hearse with an orange question mark on the back.

In the end, Adams said none of them found what they were looking for. That particular excursion eventually ended with her parents wiring money to Toronto for a plane ticket home.

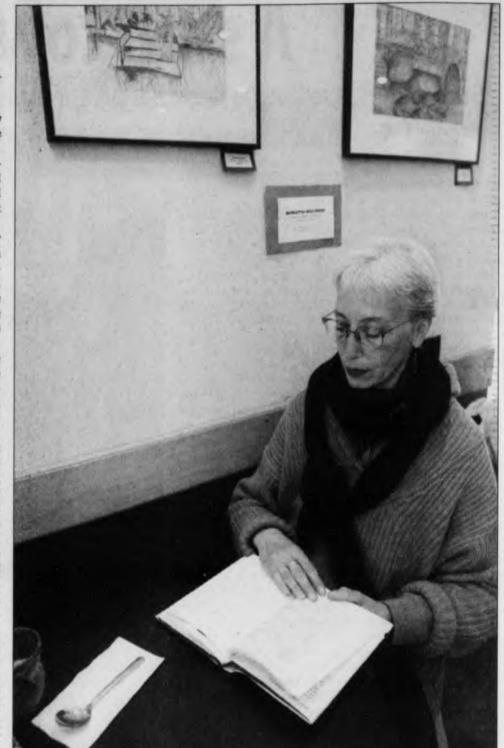

What did bring fulfillment was an unconventional hospital in Denver, where she said she became a vegetarian and learned to use plants as medicine. She said even a plant's color can affect a person.

"It's fascinating to me," she said. "Color has an energy. If you surround yourself with a broad spectrum of color, you can experience all those ener-

She said since studying the effects certain plants have on her body, she's had almost no health problems. She suggested people experiment with different foods and natural remedies to discover what connects with their own bodies.

Adams said she sometimes practices plant meditation.

She said Artemisia is almost always the focus of such studies and is a plant with many characteristics she feels she embodies. The name is derived from the Greek goddess Artemis, usually depicted with a crescent moon above her head and said to protect forests and children. Adams said Artemisia glows in moonlight, and its scent can have a calming effect, especially on children.

Wendy Adams, manager at Westside Market, reads a book Wednesday afternoon at Radina's Coffeehouse & Roastery. Adams said her interest in plant meditation has grown during the last 20 years.

Adams said her philosophical and spiritual school of thought revolves around the individual, internal perspectives shaping the world in which one

The dark, lively room in which she sits is evidence of that philosophy. Browns and beiges reflect the natural Earth, yet here and there, splashes of red leave one wondering if there are still hidden facets within the mystery of Adams' life.

The language contained within her poem is the clearest window into that mystery. The final thoughts she scrawls in thin, black ink are as fragrant as the plant she depicts.

"I will perfume your skin with whispers of ancient sweet earth mysteries and the divine dance of moon essence."

Personalized license plates distinguish cars, show individuality

By Salena Strate KANSAS STATE COLLEGIA

License plates identify not only a car but also a person. Many students might identify themselves with a Powercat logo or their initials.

But one insignia that ties all vehicles together is the license plate standard.

According to an article published by The Journal of the Society of Automotive Engineers, R.M. Hudson, chief of the division of simplified practice of the Department of Commerce, recommended a national standard for automobile license plates be adopted by the state authorities. Also, according to Hudson, a license plate serves two major purposes: registration and identification.

Pam Woods, supervisor and deputy adviser for the county treasurer in Riley County, said registration and identification is important for law enforce-letters, numbers or spaces. In adon to regular registration fees, $46 is required for personalization. Also, plates cannot contain anything vulgar.

"It was something the state came up with in 1975," Woods said. "People want something to distinguish about them."

Woods said during her 35 years at the treasurer's office, she has seen some pretty odd tags. Manhattan Wrecker Service applied to have HOOKER on its vehicle tag. Woods said the company had a hard time getting the tag approved by the state board, but it was approved.

"I had one a couple of years ago that said URAQT, 'You are a cutie," she said. "My husband had RUREDE, 'Are "People can take tags for different things, but if you sit back and read them, they make sense."

Alesia McNutt, junior in mathematics, said in high school she had a personalized tag saying "COOLH2O," for the perfume she said she loved.

"My family knew how obsessed I was with the perfume, so when I got a new car my mom got the license tag for me," McNutt said.

Jeff Cameron, sophomore in golf course management, said his older sister once had a tag bearing the letters GA2SING, because she was an opera

"I probably wouldn't do it, but it does make your car unique." Cameron said. "It's not a big deal to me, but it tells a little bit about personality or what the person is about."

Alumni and students can get tags with purple personalization and donate back to the university through the license plate scholarship.

The educational scholarship started in 1996 through the Alumni Association, and more than $90,000 is raised annually, said Dee Tebbutt, records clerk at the Alumni Association.

Each year, tag owners pay $50 to the Alumni Association to renew their plates. Forty-five dollars of this annual fee is retained for the student scholarPersonalized plates See If you can decode these vanity plates m around the country.

Vonnegut wrote plays, essays and short fictional stories, but it was his novels that became classics of the American counterculture, making him a literary idol, particularly to students in the 1960s and '70s. Dog-eared paperback copies of his books could be found in the back pockets of blue jeans and in dorm rooms on campuses throughout the United States.

Country-western concert to benefit MS Society as part of Ag Fest

By Kendra Stiles KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jason Boland & the Stragglers will perform at 8 p.m. Thursday at Weber Arena for the College of Agriculture's "Ag for a Cure Benefit Concert."

A country-western group based out of Oklahoma, Jason Boland & the Stragglers has sold more than 100,000 records since the release of its first album in January 2000.

The concert is part of this year's Ag Fest and the proceeds will go directly to the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Kelsey Frasier, junior in agricultural economics and public relations and chair of Ag Fest, said she was excited to have the group perform as part of the events.

"They have done concerts for the Multiple Sclerosis Society before," she said. "We wanted to make this a benefit concert because we wanted the money to go toward something and to add a new aspect to Ag Fest."

Jason Boland, who grew up in Oklahoma listening to Johnny Cash and Waylon Jennings, said he started performing solo in clubs in Stillwater, Okla., in 1993.

Since the group formed in 2000, it has played in venues all over Kansas, including Manhattan. Boland said the band members are excited to be back.

"It's like returning to home stomping ground for us," he said. "We started coming here many, many moons ago. We do a lot of [benefit concerts]. We always try to help out when we can get the chance."

Frasier said a short presentation from representatives of the Multiple Sclerosis Society and a set by Clay Center native and K-State alumnus Pete Gile will precede the group's performance.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 at the door and can be purchased at RB Outpost, Varney's K-State Place in Town Center Mall, Varney's in Aggieville or the K-State

Employers find study abroad experiences increase job skills

By Andrea Zeek DAILY NEWS (BALL STATE U.)

MUNCIE, Ind. - Surfing in Australia, frequenting the pubs in Ireland and looking at the lights of the Eiffel Tower in France sound like a vacation, but they also can help students find a job after graduating college. Even getting hopelessly lost on the London Underground subway can show impressive problem-solving skills during an interview.

Studying abroad gives students an edge when applying for jobs because employers look for students with selfreliance and communication skills learned from living in another country.

"Employers like to see that job candidates have a wide range of experience," said Joe Goodwin, assistant director of the Ball State University Career Center. "Study abroad shows someone that is able to adapt and function in other cultures. It shows adaptability, being able to deal with unfamiliar situations, and for some students, the ability to speak a foreign language."

Students must recognize this as well, because the Rinker Center for International Programs has seen a 12 percent increase in the number of students going abroad since the 2003-04 academic year, said Jim Coffin, RCIP director.

An all-time high of 624 Ball State students studied abroad last year, he said, and more are enrolled this year.

Experience abroad globalizes students and helps them understand other cultures, Coffin said.

"It gives them insights into how to partner with overseas corporations," he said. "It networks them with potential overseas colleagues, and it broadens their minds on the dynamics that lead to corporate strategies and decision making."

Elisabeth Zimkowski, a college recruiter for Dell Inc. who interviewed Ball State students at the Career Center on Tuesday, said while students without international experience are considered for jobs, studying abroad will put applicants at a distinct advantage. The kinds of adaptive qualities and problem-solving skills students learn while abroad are valuable at any job, she Zimkowski said when recruiting, most companies practice competency-based interviewing, such as asking students to describe a specific time and place where they worked through an unfamiliar or crisis situation. "This is where students can cite their study abroad experience," she said. "(Some companies think) past experience is the best predictor of future expe-

Senior Ashley Briggs, who planned to teach biology, said she spent three months at the Australia Center last spring because she always had wanted to visit the country and the center offered science courses such as marine biology and rainforest ecology. Her experience abroad will definitely enrich her résumé, she said.

"It makes you a more well-rounded person," Briggs said. "I'm definitely more financially aware; I went over there with 'x' amount of dollars, and I had to make a budget for the entire time."

Traveling around a foreign country by herself helped Briggs gain a sense of independence, she said.

"I wish I could do it again," she said. "I would love to go back. It's definitely on my list of things to do before I die."

Coffin said students also network through the classes they take and the places they

"Exchange students have classmates from around the world," he said. "Field experiences offer students the opportunity to visit and learn about international workplaces and the issues that those workplaces are facing internationally. Study abroad students also informally meet individuals from around the world with like interests."

Students have made connections with overseas employers while studying abroad, he said.

Alumna Angie Manginelli, a former London Centre student, got a position at EUSA, a pan-European study abroad program that works with universities to provide students with internships in Europe, Coffin said.

"They experience the joy of life that comes with making new friends and new experiences," he said. "Most of us have an adventurous spirit in us; it's part of the human spirit.

Suicide rate linked to gun ownership

By Sophie M. Alexander HARVARD CRIMSON (HARVARD)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - Suicide rates are higher in areas where guns are more prevalent, according to a Harvard University School of Public Health study published Wednesday.

The researchers found that gun ownership elevates the risk of suicide among all groups by a factor of 1.9, and as much as 2.4 among people under age

"I hope (the study) will make people realize that suicide is in fact a preventable public health problem," said Matthew Miller, assistant professor of Health Policy and Management and lead author of the study.

This was the first study to examine the relationship between household firearm ownership rates and successful suicide attempts on a national level, he said.

Joe Waldron, the executive director of the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, said he does not believe suicide rates are linked to gun ownership rates and that he was wary of the

"A lot of people who take pills or cut their wrists or use other relatively inefficient means of trying to commit suicide aren't trying to commit suicide," he said.

"The bottom line is, if a person is seriously interested in committing suicide, they're going to find a means to do it." The Harvard team found no link between gun ownership levels and non-firearm suicide.

Miller said he and his team plan to study how health-care providers counsel their patients about reducing exposure to guns and other potential suicide tools.

What we would like to see is that if you're a psychiatrist and you have an incredibly depressed teenager, instead of slowly treating the depression, you also make sure there aren't lethal weapons (accessible)," said David Hemenway, Professor of Health Policy and a coauthor of the study.

Miller said that he hoped the study would resonate outside the medical community,

"The goal here is to create an understanding of the risks that are involved in gun ownership and possibly shift social norms about meaning of gun ownership and the actuality that having a gun actually imperils rather than protects," he

Athlete steroid use increases in spite of effects

By Sue Wang DAILY BRUIN (UCLA)

LOS ANGELES - With the pressure of competition looming in their minds, an increasing number of athletes are turning to steroids to help improve their performance and gain a winning edge over non-users.

anabolic-andro-Though genic steroids, synthetic versions of the male hormone testosterone, serve powerful and useful medical purposes, many experts agree the misuse of these drugs can have devastating consequences.

The drug's increasing prevalence has led to a rise in the potential for damage.

According to the National Institute of Drug Abuse's "Monitoring the Future" survey, there was a general increase in steroid use from 1.5 to 1.8 percent in 2006.

And while steroid use in general is rare, the drug's effectiveness makes it especially risky and has led to a rise in the potential for damage for the few who do use it.

"The topic of anabolic steroids has sparked controversy in recent years since they are so prevalent and effective," said Barney Schlinger, professor at University of California-Los Angeles Department of Physiological Science.

"What makes them so interesting is that they can go wherever they want in the body - the molecular structure allows them to pass through all tissues," Schlinger said. "They are very potent because a small amount of hormones can have a huge impact."

Anabolic steroids, such as

Deca Durabolin or Dianabol taken by injection or in the form of a pill, can be used medically for bone marrow and growth stimulation, hormone replacement therapy and muscle wasting due to cancer or AIDS.

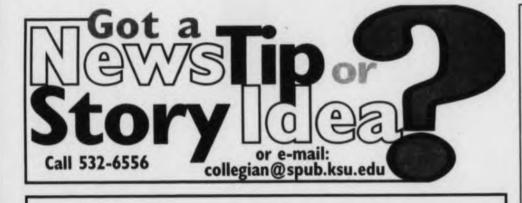

"Yet when anabolic steroids are misused, as many athletes take 10 to 100 times the prescribed dosage to increase muscle mass, extremely harmful side effects can occur," said Don Catlin, president of the Anti-Doping Research Institute and former director of the UCLA Olympic Analytical Laboratory.

"They improve performance in lots of sports, not just lifting and throwing, but running and cycling as well," Catlin said. "If they didn't work, there wouldn't be an issue."

Honor society event promotes personal, online protection

By Brie Handgraaf KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Parents will get help profecting their children from predators and pedophiles Saturday at the Wamego ATA Black Belt Academy.

In association with Manhattan ATA Academy and the help of local businesses, the Highland Community College's Phi Theta Kappa honor society will have a free childsafety day to help teach parents and children ways to protect themselves from danger.

"Obviously, in Taekwondo we teach self-defense, but we wanted an opportunity to open ourselves up to the community on a single day where they can learn the basics," said Troy Auman, owner and instructor at the Manhattan ATA Academy.

"Just because we are in Kansas doesn't mean we're safe from One program offered will be Internet-based child exploitation awareness

"There is a big gap between parents and their knowledge of what their children are doing, especially with teenagers." said Trevor Reschke, one of the owners of Turiss, a digital investigation company. "That is one of the common themes we've seen with children that are exploited. The parents or the grandparents have absolutely no idea what the kids are doing."

Aside from the information families will gain from the events, children will get a free child-safety DVD and Tshirt. Also, during the 3 p.m. program, a police officer will help parents prepare free fingerprint and DNA kits in case their child is abducted.

Brad Egan, president of Phi Theta Kappa at Highland Community College and event coordinator, said he hopes families are never in a situation where they have to use this information to protect themselves, but if one child is saved by it, their effort is worth

"Personally, what I'm hoping is that we get more community based," Egan said. "I mean, we might not know our neighbors, but we probably need to be paying attention to who lives around us, what kids belong there and what cars don't belong. I think we as a community need to be more proactive in the protection of

Commander surveys border deployment

By Maria Sudekum Fisher THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YUMA, Ariz. - Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting, commanding officer of the Kansas National Guard, is being whisked around this border town in a sand-colored Suburban after a six-hour flight from Topeka headquarters, and he's a little antsy.

"I want to maximize the amount of time with the troops," Bunting says into his cell phone, after grabbing a 10minute lunch at a Subway restaurant on Tuesday. Soon, he is peering out the passenger side window of the SUV and sees a group of men in fatigues at a work station out in the desert.

"Are those our guys?" Bunting asks.

The driver says yes and pulls in. Bunting is out of the SUV in a hurry. He chats up Senior Airman Kevin Nease from Sabetha, Kan., and Tech. Sgt. Kenny Ellis, Topeka, asking them how it's going since they deployed March 31 to work on a section of the security fence along the Mexico border.

Bunting, also dressed in fatigues, puts on work gloves and a hard hat and helps lift and turn 175-pound steel panels that will be used on the fence, about a mile south along a dusty road.

The lifting is likely more for the two cameras trained on Bunting, but it's clear this is part of what he likes about his job as the state's adjutant general.

Minutes later - and minutes count here, because Bunting only has this afternoon to touch base with his troops, whose work schedule was interrupted the day before by a visit from President Bush - Bunting is back in the Suburban and headed south to the fence, where the rest of the 44 Kansas National Guard troops are working with Guard members from other states, mostly welding those 175-pound panels onto the fence.

"Are these our guys?" Bunting asks, and he again pops out and heads toward Master Sgt. Mark Sabes, who's running a forklift hoisting a platform where Sabes' son, Senior Airman Chris Sabes, 21, is welding fence pieces. Sabes, a vehicle mechanic, says it is his second deployment with his son. The first was to Israel.

"In fact, on both deployments there have been issues when someone has said to Chris, 'Hey, have you cleared that with your dad?' And I said. 'No, for the purpose of the deployment, the dad is the first

Kan., where the World's Largest Ball of Twine sits for all to see along Kansas Highway 24.

According to the Web site, the man-made exhibit was started by a farmer and later given to the city. The size of the ball continues to grow with an annual twine-a-thon event.

Then drive 39 miles to Lucas. Kan. After checking out the World's Largest Collection of World's Smallest Version of World's Largest Things traveling museum, view recycled-material exhibits at the Grassroots Art Center.

Martin suggests also seeing the Garden of Eden. He said the exhibit features a log cabin surrounded by statues made out of concrete that portray different aspects of the Garden of Eden.

HISTORICAL ROAD TRIP 246 MILES

Besides the business of Lawrence and Kansas City, Kan., a road trip spent in the extreme east area of Kansas also offers a variety of historical sites.

First, take a 122-mile drive to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to start an educational day.

According to the travel and tourism division Web site, Fort Leavenworth offers a historical tour of sites on the post that is the "oldest Army installation in continuous services west of the Mississippi River," but remember to bring photo ID.

Next, travel 36 miles to Jayhawk territory to find history from Bleeding Kansas and museums at the University of Kansas, Martin said.

According to the Lawrence Conventions and Visitors Bureau Web site, the city has a number of historical tours to choose from, such as the Dole Institute of Politics located on KU's West Campus. The institute displays exhibits dating back half a century of Kansas and American history.

After seeing enough of Lawrence, Martin suggests stopping by Topeka, which is a 27-mile drive from Lawrence, before continuing back to Manhattan.

He said sites to see in the capital city include the Brown v. Board National Historical Site and Museum, Kansas Museum of History and murals in the Kansas State Capitol.

SCENIC ROAD TRIP | 137

Start the day driving 27 miles southeast of Manhattan to the town of Alma, Kan., where the trip begins.

Martin said Alma is an interesting town with German heritage, but its landscape is the main attraction. He said he likes driving from Alma to Alta Vista, Kan., on the Mill Creek-Skyline Drive because of the scenery.

"It's really a pretty road," he said. "You get a sense of what the Flint Hills really look like."

Martin has driven the road between the two towns often and said it is about 10 miles.

Then, head 15 miles south toward Council Grove, Kan., to experience part of the readymade adventure suggested on the travel and tourism division

According to the site, tourists should visit the Allegawaho Heritage Memorial Park and walk the 2 1/2-mile trail of the first Kansas Kaw Indian village.

Visitors also can walk the self-guided tour of the Santa Fe Trail in the town and see 24 sites like the Hermit's Cave and eat at the Hays House.

If still in the mood for exercise and scenery, head 20 miles farther south to Strong City, Kan., to the Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve, where visitors can hike trails and tour one of the tallest barns in the state.

RANDOM ROAD TRIP 391 MILES

Be aware, this trip likely will require an extra gas stop.

Hours of operation

Brown v. Board of Education National Historic Site and Museum, Topeka, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

Dole Institute of Politics, Lawrence, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Ralph Mitchell Zoo, Independence, 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. in the summer and 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in the winter.

According to the Roadside America Web site, the southeast area of the state has several offthe-beaten-path attractions, and most of them happen to be free.

First, head toward Independence, Kan., but plan on leaving early as it is a 187-mile drive. Starting around 8 or 9 a.m., drive southeast for the Little House on the Prairie log cabin, which is located near the former home of Laura Ingalls Wilder.

Next, travel to the Ralph Mitchell Zoo that has a Monkey Island, the site that formerly housed Miss Able, a rhesus monkey who had the opportunity to travel to outer space. Admission to the zoo is free.

Finally, go 41 miles southwest to Chanute, Kan., to view the Martin and Osa Johnson Safari Museum that displays the works of these two Kansans who explored Africa.

All of the driving distances. were calculated using the Google Maps.

The team of all female students said they joined the olympics because it was a tradition.

"We like to do it," she said. "It's a lot of fun. We're all from farms so we already know how to do a lot of it - especially the truck push."

Teams exhibited a variety of skills and experience, speeding through some events while slowing down during others.

"I liked the post drive the most," said Michael Dikeman, professor of animal science. "We were the best at that one."

Dikeman's team, named Out to Pasture, was composed of all professors of animal science, two of whom he said are older than 60 years old.

Jessie Smith, a junior in animal science and chair of the olympics, said the competition between students and faculty is a popular part of Ag Fest.

Cargil Grain Company donated prizes to the winning teams, which were divided into male, female, co-ed and faculty leagues.

Though the recent rise in the cost of gasoline and oil may not be consumer friendly, the state of Kansas has benefited considerably from the price hikes.

2 Guardsmen awarded Purple Hearts

By Katelynn Hasler KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President Bush presented several military service members, including two Kansas National Guardsmen, with Purple Heart medals in a ceremony on March 30

The two Kansas guardsmen who received medals were Sgt. Bruce Dunlap, of Kansas City, Mo., and Staff Sgt. Jerrod L. Hays, of Wellington, Kan. The medals were awarded for wounds received in combat during a ceremony at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. Both men are members of Battery B, 1st Battalion, 161st Field Artillery, Paola, Kan.

"I'm very proud of these fine Kansas soldiers who have served their country well, and I'm honored President Bush chose two troops from the Heartland to present Purple Heart medals to recently," said Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting, Kansas adjutant general, in a press release Monday.

The two soldiers were injured in separate incidents involving improvised explosive devices while serving with their unit in Iraq as part of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"Over there, we're constantly in harm's way," said Dunlap, who was injured Dec. 11, 2006. "You just do your job. I'm really proud of how we handled our business, and I can be proud of my medal because of that."

Hays was injured during an explosion that killed another soldier, Staff Sgt. David R. Berry, on Feb. 22.

Four other soldiers received Purple Hearts in the same ceremony, said Sharon Watson, director of public affairs for the adjutant general's department. Bush regularly distributes Purple Hearts, but is not the only person to award the medals, she said.

The soldiers were selected at random to receive their medals from Bush, Dunlap said. The medal is awarded to members of the U.S. Armed Forces who are wounded by enemy action.

By Logan C. Adams KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nick Piper was elected student senate chair at the legislative body's meeting Thursday night. Piper, business senator and junior in finance, defeated Annie Dwyer, arts and sciences senator and junior in political science, and Clint Blaes, agriculture senator and senior in agricultural communications and journalism.

The senate then elected Amy Schultz, engineering senator and sophomore in pre-med, to the position of student senate vice chair.

The senate unanimously approved a resolution asking the Kansas Legislature to address the $700 million of deferred maintenance at Kansas Board of Regents universities. Student Body President Matt Wagner said the Legislature adjourned this month without a proposal to address the backlog.

Vocal professor retiring after 42 years at K-State

By Elise Podhajsky KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After more than 40 years of teaching, researching, performing and introducing new curricula at K-State, vocal professor Jean Sloop is retiring.

She has earned several research grants; conducted the Women's Glee Club and Madrigals; taught theory, composition, diction and history; served as the Beta chapter president of Phi Beta Kappa; served on the Fulbright committee; won numerous awards and honors; and performed in K-State productions like "The Console," "La Bohéme," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Hansel and Gretel" and "Carmen."

Having come to K-State in 1959, Sloop said she has seen the school's ups and downs, but has kept a positive attitude through it all, while also trying to advance the department. But getting to where she is now was not smooth sailing. Sloop endured significant setbacks and discrimination through her journey of teaching vocal performance and performing music research.

Sloop grew up in a small town in Pennsylvania, where she attended Gettysburg College and became the school's first music major. At the time, no performance degree was offered, so to earn her bachelor's degree, she studied music theory and music his-

Her true passion had always been vocal performance, though, Sloop said. After graduation, she went to the Eastman School of Music, but the school's theory department chair thought her talents weren't suited for

"He simply told me I wasn't qualified," Sloop said.

She was tight on money, but agreed to study theory at Eastman if the school extended her grants. But because she was a woman, members of the department were hesitant. Sloop said the school's dean was quoted as saying, "She's a girl, she's just going to get married. She's obviously never going to finish this graduate degree, so I don't think we should give her all the money."

Austin Short, senior in applied music, and Alicia Williams, senior in music, listen to professor Jean Sloop analyze sheet music as part of the class Methods and Materials

Sloop finished her graduate study in theory at Eastman, after being $200 short of tuition each semester.

She later interviewed and accepted a teaching position at Erwin College, where she taught theory. But, Sloop said, she wanted a job where she could spend most of her time researching music. She heard about a teaching position at K-State, submitted an application and was hired.

In 1959, Sloop came to Kansas to teach voice and conduct the women's glee club and madrigals. At age 26,

Panel discusses history of volatile situation in Afghanistan

By Austin Apple KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A panel of Afghanistan relations experts discussed the future of K-State's involvement in the country's rebuilding process.

"In some way, every department at K-State is involved in the redevelopment of Afghanistan," said Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Ebadi began the discussion by speaking about the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan in 1979. He also talked about the importance of the Taliban, and how the United States became involved in the conflict.

"A coalition has been made to work against the regime put in place by the Soviet Union," he said.

Education is a key factor in the redevelopment of Afghanistan, he said. This the main area in which K-State has lent its help.

"I cannot thank the faculty and those involved enough for helping," Ebadi said.

· Changing the social and political climate is a long process, he said.

World Bank already has set aside $40 million for education, but more changes are needed in Afghanistan, said Naqibullah Azimi, Grain Industry Alliance International finance and administration manager.

Education is cherished in Afghanistan, Azimi said.

"Students who have tents to study in are lucky," Azimi said. "Some students are studying in tents, while some are studying in an open

The lack of education is one among several problems, he said. Families are unable to use electricity because it can cost more than $900 a month, and Internet is $500 per month and is very slow, Azimi said.

Another factor that slows the Afghan rebuilding process is the civil war in the re-

Afghanistan has seen revolution and civil war since

There is an entire generation that has known nothing but civil war, said Gary Gilbert, team leader for GIAI in Kabul, Afghanistan.

"There are those who will want to continue to have insurgents because it is politically advantageous," he said.

Some insurgents do not necessarily come from within Afghanistan's own borders, but instead from neighboring countries, like Pakistan.

"They are not openly aggressive against Afghanistan," Gilbert said. "But most of the insurgents that come into Afghanistan come from training camps created (in Pakistan) by the United States' government to unseat the communist government that is established."

Many Pakistani citizens, however, are doing their part to help the situation in Afghanistan.

Many of the markets that meet the demand of food and supplies are in Pakistan, Gilbert said.

"Pakistan is doing a tremendous effort in assisting Afghanistan, while at the same time, they are being rewarded financially for the sales of flour," he said. Pakistan's wheat can only be sold

Gilbert said it is encouraging to know that young people care about Afghanistan and that they know Afghanistan's history of civil war and attempts to drive people out of the country in which they wanted to stay.

Even so, a power struggle still continues today.

"Americans have a good heart but tire quickly," Gilbert said, "The political resolve of the American taxpayer is a critical part of this."

Gilbert said he is confident that within 15 years, Afghanistan will be unrecognizable.

'Mythbusters' co-hosts to speak, answer questions tonight at McCain

as flour.

By Austin Apple KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will have the opportunity to ask two of the cohosts of Discovery Channel's "Mythbusters" questions about the show as part of the All-University Open House.

The event will take place tonight at 7 p.m. in McCain Auditorium. Students with valid student IDs can get a ticket for free. For non-students, the event is $6.

"When we do these sorts of talks, we like to show clips from the show," said Grant Imahara, co-host of "Mythbusters," who will appear along with co-host Kari Bryon.

The clips cannot be shown on Discovery Channel, he said, and some of these have to do with lighthearted subjects like flatulence.

"We want to answer the burning questions students want to ask about us," Imahara said. "This will also give students the opportunity to get to know a little bit more about us."

The tour is possible because

"Kari and I have five different colleges that we are going to, and Manhattan is one of the stops on the tour," Imahara said. "It is a lot of fun for us to go and talk to colleges."

Living in San Francisco and producing the show much of the year makes the "Mythbusters" team feel a bit detached from their fans, he

"Whenever Kari, Tori, Jamie, Adam or I get to go out and do these talks it reminds how popular and how much people like to do the show," Imahara said.

Arranging for the pair to come to K-State was relatively easy, said Tristan Tafolla, senior in political science and member of Union Program Council.

"You just call the agency and pick a date that you have a facility available and see if they are available," said Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union Program Council.

UPC wanted the event to coincide with Open House so students and their families could attend, Bailey said.

Political persecution

Candidates' positions on issues should be more important to voters than their religious practices

Mitt Romney, 2008 Republican presidential candidate, says he stands for American culture and values.

GIRARD

According to his campaign Web site, these values include respect for hard work, sacrifice. civility, love of family, respect for life, education and love of freedom.

Romney, the governor of Massachusetts since 2002, has many plans to implement for the country if elected, but many voters are assailing him with a truckload of inquiries about one aspect of his

His presidential qualifications aren't being questioned because he's thrown kittens out of six-story buildings or smoked hashish with Osama bin Laden.

Rather, people are questioning him because he is Mormon.

According to a report from the April 4 Washington Post, Romney has fielded several questions from voters who are concerned about his religious beliefs. Many of the people questioning Romney, according to the article, are traditional Christian constituents.

Something seems wrong here. Christians are questioning Romney because his faith centers on an all-knowing being and a savior preaching good and moral behavior? Sounds familiar.

Looking at these basic aspects, Christianity and Mormonism are very similar. So why are Mormons bad for political office?

They may have some beliefs that many, including myself, would classify as mildly psychotic, but so do Christians.

Mormons are not innately bad people. It's unfair that Christians and other voters question a candidate who has values similar to most previous U.S. presidents, who predominantly have been Chris-

'My faith includes a fundamental belief that we are all sons and daughters of a loving God," Romney said in the Washington Post article. "I happen to believe that Jesus Christ is my personal savior and the son of God."

Sounds like a Christian to me. Mormonism should not be any different than the religions of other candidates.

Voters should base their decisions less on the religions of the candidates and more on their stances and values.

For instance, Romney said last week that he was a lifelong hunter, when in fact, according to the Associated Press, he has not even taken out a hunting license. Mike Huckabee, Democratic presidential candidate, said it best.

"I think it was a major mistake," he said. "It would be like me saying I've been a lifelong golfer because I played putt-putt when I was 9 years old, and I rode in a golf cart a couple of times."

Illustration by Nate Schmidt | COLLEGIAN

Voters should be more cautious of a candidate who says he has hunted just to gain votes - when playing Duck Hunt might be the closest he came to actual hunting

- than one who is Mormon.

I probably will not vote for Romney next year. But that's because his stances, comments and actions have not impressed me, not because he is Mormon.

Civil-rights leaders want sympathy, attention more than equality

Having lost his TV spot, and, as of yesterday, been totally dumped by CBS, we can safely say it's about midnight for Don Imus'

The rat-faced little talk-show host is scampering off to wallow in grief with his millions of dollars while "leaders of the black community" shake their fists in the air and high-five each other for a crucifixion well done.

We can all certainly agree that Imus is a total screeching idiot and that the detractors arguing "nappy-headed ho" isn't racist need to have their heads checked. Those aren't words you would level at someone from say, Belgium.

But for all the false rage and late-night vigils and protest marches and endless tirades shooting like flies from the mouth of the Revs. Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson, their only successes have been rocketing Don Imus to superstardom and, once again, hacking people right off about double standards.

As a start, we have the Billboard Hot R&B/Hip-Hop's No. 3 song, "I'm A Flirt," with R. Kelly and Bow Wow featuring among the song's lyrical brilliance four instances of "nigga" and, "Now the moral of story is cuff yo bitch," in the second line before the chorus.

Further down the list at No. 6 is Mims and "This is Why I'm Hot," with "nigga" popping up six times and, "This is why I'm hot / catch me on the block / every other day / another bitch another drop," in the intro to verse two.

Again, for all their apparent concern about the damage and destruction hateful words can cause, we've yet to see Jesse and Al protesting Columbia or Capitol Records, just like we've yet to hear a call for boycotts of albums and artists producing this trash. The ugly truth is that we rarely see Jesse or Al in roles where they cannot play a popular victim Making a principled stance against referring to women as "hos" is terrific. But the stances offered are picked and chosen so as to maximize the "poor me-dom" of victimization while avoiding making a stand against lucrative and incredibly popular forms of entertainment.

The point of arbitrarily deciding what is and is not insulting was only underlined on NBC's Morning Show when Whoopie Goldberg chimed in, "It doesn't matter if it's a double standard."

When Spike Lee was confronted with the same problem during the show he responded, "That's another conversation."

These discussions are considered the big social no-no of the time, just as is the broader discussion of the importance of race. But if we've rejected a double standard in employment, housing and education, why in hell do we accept a blatant double standard in what is and is not considered acceptable speech? Ultimately, even when amends are made, the grand performers of victimization, Jesse and Al, want nothing of it.

When Imus hauled himself to Al Sharpton's house to apologize, no one wanted to hear it - apology not accepted. The good reverend had no interest in creating an ally in the cause for equality. He had no interest in forgiveness; he had interest only in making an example. If Sharpton bases his religion around emulating Jesus Christ, it certainly is hard to tell.

No one, I'm assuming, believes gratuitous use of racial slurs or derogatory terms in any sense is somehow culturally enriching. Us-, ing words to belittle only spotlights the speaker's cavernous ignorance. But if the civil-rights leaders of today want to regalvanize the nation, they need to plant their feet in principle and quit pretending we can pick and choose virtue as we

Americans should keep in mind there are more soldiers serving the U.S. abroad than those involved with the war on terror

The current conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan dominate the majority of attention people devote to the military. As such, the "Support our troops" bumper stickers conjure an almost knee-jerk reminder of the current and high-publicity military missions. But the military activities that make the evening news aren't the only ones that are ongoing.

We currently have soldiers, sailors, marines and airmen deployed to Kuwait, Kosovo, South Korea, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Colombia, numerous African countries and any number of missions all over the world. They might be fewer in number, and their missions aren't making headlines, but their work is no less important.

U.S. forces in tandem with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization have secured Bosnia and Herzegovina along with Kosovo since the mid-1990s, but many soldiers remain there trying to bring to fruition the objectives laid out for them nearly a decade before.

Similarly, troops have stayed in Kuwait and Turkey, first to enforce the no-fly zones within Iraq, and now to provide support for troops engaged in combat. Our forces maintain posts in Colombia to discourage growth of illegal coca plants used to make drugs, and our forces deliver food aid in developing areas struck by famine and drought.

Every U.S. embassy in the world - some in hostile countries - is staffed by a small contingent of military staff to support the government personnel, and many countries request our highly trained military to assist in the training of their own forces.

Our ignorance of these missions and their importance can even, at times, be detrimental. Few people realized that a large contingent of United States troops were operating in Somalia until; they became entangled in the vicious battle which spawned the book "Black" Hawk Down."

Further, as citizens of the world's last military superpower remaining aware of the roles our military performs in our name is the responsibility of everyone.

So "supporting the troops" is more than reading the headlines. While we continue to support the men and women serving in well-broadcast areas, we also should remember that many thousands more are working to improve the world, away from the cameras and the flashing lights.

SUICIDE BOMB KILLS 8, BREACHES TIGHT SECURITY IN IRAQI PARLIAMENT

BAGHDAD - A suicide bomber slipped through the tightest security net in Baghdad and blew himself up in the midst of lawmakers having lunch in the parliament dining hall Thursday. U.S. officials said eight people, including parliament members, were killed in the deadliest-ever attack in the American-guarded Green Zone.

The stunning breach of security, on the same day a massive bombing destroyed one of Baghdad's main bridges, laid a cloud of heavy doubt about progress in the latest U.S.-Iraqi bid to clamp off violence in the capital.

IRAN OPERATING SEVERAL HUNDRED CENTRIFUGES, LESS THAN CLAIMED

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia - The head of the U.N. nuclear watchdog said Wednesday Iran is operating only several hundred centrifuges at its uranium enrichment plant at Natanz, despite its claims to have activated 3,000.

Mohamed ElBaradei said Iran's nuclear program was a concern, but he discounted Tehran's claims of a major advance in uranium enrichment, a process the United Nations demands Iran suspend or else be hit by increasing sanctions.

DISARMAMENT PROCESS IN NORTH KOREA STALLED DUETO FINANCIAL DISPUTE

SEOUL, South Korea -North Korea appeared increasingly unlikely to meet a deadline to shut down its nuclear reactor, staying silent Thursday about whether or not it was satisfied with a U.S. solution to a financial dispute that has stalled the disarmament process.

The U.S., South Korea and China said the North has not withdrawn some $25 million that was unfrozen this week in a bank in the Chinese territory of Macau. Washington had blacklisted the Banco Delta Asia in September 2005 for allegedly helping the North launder money and pass counterfeit $100 bills.

TEENAGER DETAINED IN ETHIOPIA CLAIMS U.S. SOLDIERS LED OPERATION

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - A Swedish teenager who was imprisoned for weeks with alleged terror suspects in Ethiopia said in an interview published Thursday that Americans in military uniform directed the Kenyan soldiers who took her into custody on the Somali-Kenyan border.

The statements by 17-yearold Safia Benaouda were the first to describe a broader U.S. role in the detentions. Other detainees have said they were taken into custody by Kenyans.

RUSSIA, CHINA IMPOSE MORE RESTRICTIVE RULES FOR ADOPTION AGENCIES

MOSCOW -Authorities said Thursday they have halted the work of all foreign adoption agencies in Russia, virtually shutting down the placement of children from one of the most important countries for U.S. families seeking to adopt.

The move follows new restrictive rules imposed by China on Americans trying to adopt and U.S. warnings against adopting from Guatemala. The two countries account for the highest number of children coming to the United States.

TURKISH MILITARY CHIEF SEEKS PERMISSION TO ATTACK REBELS

ANKARA, Turkey - Turkey's military asked the government Thursday to approve attacks on Kurdish rebels in northern Iraq, signaling growing frustration over a lack of action against the guerrillas by Iraqi and U.S. forces.

Such action could put an overstretched U.S. military in the middle of a fight between two crucial partners, the Turks and the Iraqi Kurds, and Washington urged Turkish restraint. A recent surge in Kurdish attacks in southeastern Turkey has increased the pressure on Turkey's military to act.

Paying extra is worth it for oil independence

Editor.

Apparently, you decided that the better alternative to ethanol would be to continue sending American money overseas to the Middle East for oil.

You may not feel that ethanol is the perfect solution, but you fail to counter with a better alternative.

You may not like the idea that politicians use it as bargaining power, but that doesn't take away the many benefits millions of Americans are already reaping - and will continue to reap - from a shift into more ethanol.

Also, please do your research. It is so easy to bring up the point that the ethanol industry has driven up the price of corn for cattle feed and leave it at that. But, a coproduct of the ethanol process is distiller's dried grains with solubles, which is a cheaper feed for beef and dairy cattle, poultry and swine. Why not let the farmers get a little extra money for corn?

Speaking for myself, I'd rather pay a little extra for meat products, not to mention use a fuel that is better for the environment, than to stay so reliant on foreign oil.

Kansas National Guard members to deploy to Kosovo in the fall

By Megan Molitor KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas National Guard units will deploy on peacekeeping missions later this year. According to a press release, Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting said 200 soldiers in the 35th Division unit, based out of Fort Leavenworth, will deploy to Kosovo in the fall.

"They will mobilize in July 2007, when they will go to training at Camp Atterbury in Indiana," said Sharon Watson, Kansas National Guard public relations director. "Training varies, but they will be there for three to six months before they begin their mission."

> "Right now, it is a peaceful area with minimal disruption," Watson said. "It is an area that could change, though, so they will always be armed and carrying the correct equipment

"There has been an ongo- to ensure their safety. It is still peace."

> According to the press release, 170 soldiers of the 35th Military Police Company also will be deployed to Iraq. They are expected to leave in the next few months for training at Fort Dix. Melissa Buckentine, sophomore in bakery science and management, is one of the Army National Guard soldiers who will be going to Iraq.

Buckentine is a medic with a military police unit and has been in the Guard for threeand-a-half years. She said she is expecting a 14-month deployment.

"We will spend a month or get into Iraq, our training actually starts."

Buckentine said she does not have much information about what she will be doing Iraq except that it is "force protection at one of the prisons in Iraq."

It will be Buckentine's first deployment. Her husband is already deployed.

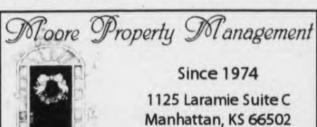

"I am kind of anxious to go, but not really nervous," she said. "With my husband gone, this will be the best time for me to go. I'm with a great group of people, and they all know what they are doing."

When Bob Huggins skipped town for West Virginia last week, he left the K-State men's basketball program with few options. The timing of Huggins' departure left the K-State administration little time to find a replacement.

With barely any time to conduct a coach search and recruits threatening to bolt, K-State promoted assistant Frank Martin to head coach. The move seemed to be the popular choice with the Wildcats' current roster and K-State's recruiting class, which is ranked No. 1 in the country by Rivals.com.

Weekend series postponed because of bad weather

By Dayne Logan KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second time in as many weekends the K-State baseball team has been forced to postpone its weekend games because of inclement weather.

According to weather.com, there is a 90-percent chance of rain turning into snow tomorrow in Manhattan. Chances for bad weather are even better in Stillwater, Okla., where the Wildcats (22-11, 4-5 Big 12 Conference) were supposed to be kicking off a three-game series with No. 15 Oklahoma State (25-8, 6-3 Big 12).

All games, including Friday's which was originally scheduled for 6:30 p.m. - have been pushed back a day, meaning the series will go from Saturday to Monday. However, Saturday's game - slotted to begin at 2 p.m. - could be in trouble too if the mix of rain and snow continues. According to the site, there is a 30-50 percent chance of rain and snow showers until 11 a.m. Sat-

If the weather eventually subsides, K-State will be up against some stiff competition in the Cow-

Oklahoma State has nine players hitting better than .300 on the year. Two of those players, seniors Tyler Mach and Ty Wright, are above the 400 mark. Additionally, junior Corey Brown, batting .383, already has hit 14 home runs this season. That's two more than the entire K-State

Add to that a pitching staff with a combined ERA of just 3.65 and one can see why the Cowboys have been so successful.

On the Wildcat side, a big week for sophomore Byron Wiley propelled his season batting average to a team-leading .402. Unfortunately, sophomore Tyler Link and senior Eli Rumler are the only other Wildcats above the .300 mark

The Wildcat starting rotation is a healthy 13-6 on the season, but the bullpen has been impressive, accounting for nine wins.

On the mound for Oklahoma State Saturday will be senior righthander Oliver Odle. Odle is 4-3 this season with an ERA of 5.05 and a strikeout to walk ratio of 33:6.

Junior Brad Hutt is expected to get the Saturday start for the Wildcats. Hutt is 6-1 this year with an ERA of 2.38 and 34 strikeouts.

Track team continues to work despite limited time to rest

By Ryne Witt

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track and field team has had little time to rest since the indoor season began four months ago.

This week's break was especially short because the team traveled to

Eugene, Ore., last week for the Pepsi Invitational

"It does start to take a toll on your body," said sophomore sprinter Mike Myer. "If something starts to bug, you have to stop and get it looked at since we are competing every week."

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he agreed, but had a slightly different take on the matter.

"Certainly there is a toll physically, and you cope with that by how you train," Rovelto said. "I think a lot of it is less physical and more mental fatigue. That is why you see a lot of the athletes not compete every week, because you just need a break."

Also, at this time of the season, training starts to change a little bit.

'(Training) becomes very individualized at this point," Rovelto said. "Coaches have to look at the individual athlete and make decisions at where they think they are going to be in a month, or two months from

That training is for the Big 12 Conference Championships May 11-13, and for the NCAA Outdoor Championships June 6-9.

The track team next will compete this week at two different event sites. One part of the team is headed to the Oklahoma Invitational in Norman, Okla., and the other is bound for El Paso, Texas, for the UTEP Invitation-Rovelto said he splits up the athletes to give them a better chance of performing well in their events.

"It is going to be nice because there are less people and you won't have all those distractions," Myer

With fewer distractions, he hoped for good races this weekend at

"My goals this weekend are to break 21 seconds in the 200 (meter dash), and in the 100 (meter dash) I want to run in the 10.3's," Myer said. "The track is going to be fast. We're going to be at altitude, so all the times are going to be fast."

BKW | K-State signs sister of senior wide receiver

K-State women's basketball coach Deb Patterson announced Wednesday that Kelsey Nelson has signed a national letter of intent to play for the Wildcats next season.

Nelson joins Jackie Stanley, Shalin Spani and Kelsey Hill as K-State's recruiting class for the 2007-08 season.

"Kelsey is a student athlete of outstanding character," Patterson said. "She brings an intensity and work ethic to the floor that elevates the play of those around her. We look for her to be a versatile guard that can stretch the defense with her 3-point shot. We are particularly impressed with the combination of Kelsey's scoring efficiency and her rebounding numbers as a perimeter player.

Nelson, a 5-foot-9 guard, averaged 18.2 points, 5.3 rebounds, 3.7 assists and 2.6 steals while shooting 49 percent from the floor and 48 percent from the 3-point range this past season at Cloud County Community College. She also earned First Team All-Conference and First Team All-Region VI.

A four-year starter at Riley County High School, Nelson is the all-time leading scorer with 1,663 points. She also holds the records for free-throws (374) and free-throw percentage (.740). Nelson was named First Team All-State her senior year after averaging 19.5 points while shooting 57 percent from the floor.

Nelson, the younger sister of Wildcats' senior wide receiver Jordy Nelson, is planning to major in elementary education at K-State.

the end of the year." This weekend, K-State (5-11, 3-4 Big 12 Conference) will face two Big 12 foes on its home court. Saturday, No. 30 Colorado will come to Aheam Field House. Colorado (12-6, 5-2 Big 12) has remained constant at No. 30 through the last two votes of the Intercollegiate Tennis Association. The Buffaloes are led by sophomore Monica Milewski, who is ranked No. 42 in the ITA individuals poll.

"I think clearly Colorado has had a good year," Bietau said. "They're deep, they've put some things together this year. They've got the same ers that they had last year, with dramat cally better results."

Sunday, K-State will play Nebraska (10-6, 3-5 Big 12). Nebraska is led by No. 52 Imke Reimers, a junior from Papenburg, Germany.

"With Nebraska, there's some similarities to us," Bietau said. "They've lost some people from last year and they're trying to recover from that." This month, K-State has focused on limiting

"There has been much discussion of the effect language like this has on our young people, particularly young women of color trying to make their way in this society," CBS President and Chief Executive Officer Leslie Moonves said

Rutgers women's basketball team spokeswoman Stacey Brann said the team did not have an immediate comment on Imus' firing.

Time Magazine once named the cantankerous broadcaster as one of the 25 Most Influential People in America, and he was a member of the National Broadcaster Hall of Fame.

Capitalism offers unnecessary products, political theorist says

By Scott Girard KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Capitalism has turned into a business of selling people goods they do not necessarily need, said a nationally renowned political theorist Thursday afternoon.

"We have gotten to the point where we have everything we need or want. That's a problem for capitalism," said Benjamin Barber, political theorist and professor at the University of Maryland. He spoke to about 200 students, faculty and community members at his lecture, "Consumers Are Not Citizens: How Markets Corrupt Democracy" Thursday in the K-State Alumni Center Ball-

Barber said a few hundred years ago, people made an effort to find new products that others would need, whether it was at that moment or ten years later.

of needs, which was harmful to capitalism because it led to a surplus of products that were not being bought, he said. Instead of going to other countries with needs for their products, companies talked people into needing products they already had. One example he cited was the availability of water in the U.S. He said although clean water is readily available from taps and faucets practically everywhere, the U.S. has spent almost $10 billion on bottled water while 3-4 million people in Third World countries do not have access to clean water.

Eventually, people ran out

"I want to know what earthly need we have for bottled water," he said.

Barber said another example of questionable capitalism techniques is the prevalence of Botox use in U.S. society. He said companies are making Botox concoctions while people in Third World counneed, but on the viewpoints of other people. He said with any other aspect of society, this obsession would be frowned upon.

"Wherever you see a Coke or McDonald's sign, imagine you saw a sign that said 'Love Christ' or 'Respect Buddha,'" he said. "We would think we live in a theocracy," he said.

Barber said citizens need to take two steps to change the culture of capitalism.

First, citizens need to return capitalism to what it was in the 1800s.

'We need to put capitalism at the disposal of the world's needs," he said. "We need to produce goods and services the people actually need."

The second step people need to take, he said, is to recreate the partnership between democracy and capitalism. He said governments need to have some regulation about how businesses trade and sell goods.

He said allowing companies to form monopolies cuts access to other companies and does not allow capital-

Chris Boutiette, graduate student in public administration, said he enjoyed Barber's lecture because he focused on how the U.S. culture is focused on producing more for itself and less for other coun-who need basic staples. Boutiette said students need to get involved with groups of people interested in the same issues as them. "Every student has something they care about," he said.

The Institute for Civic Discourse and Democracy at K-State sponsored the event. David Proctor, director of the ICDD, said the lecture was one of the largest the institute has had.

"He is the most internationally known speaker we've had," Proctor said. "He is a very important scholar in this area of civil discourse, and he was a very engaging and entertaining speaker."

Proctor also said the lecture was important to the members of ICDD.

"He is talking about consumerism in terms of democracy, which returns directly to our work at the ICDD," he

Write-in votes give Walker a spot on Student Publications board

By Eric Brown

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bill Walker's duties at K-State next year could go beyond school work and striving toward an NCAA basketball championship.

That's because Walker, freshman in open option, received enough write-in votes in the Student Governing Association general election to earn one of four spots on the Student Publications Inc.

Board of Directors.

Candidates Danesha Mc-Nelly, Austin St. John, and Jacquelynn Haberichter claimed the top three spots with more than 2,000 votes each, but Walker gathered eight writein votes, which was enough to beat out the 26 other write-in candidates for fourth place.

When asked about the possibility of earning a spot on the board, Walker responded with

"I have no idea what you're talking about," the NBA hopeful said, laughing. "No one has said anything to me about it."

Gayle Spencer, assistant dean of student life, said the board soon will contact Walker, and he will have the option to accept the position or decline it. She said by joining the board, Walker would be a part of discussing the business and operations of Student Publications Inc., which includes the K-State Collegian, the Royal Purple yearbook and the Campus Phone Book.

Walker expressed curiosity when asked whether or not he would serve a one-year term on the board.

"You know, I'll have to find out a little more on what this is all about," Walker said. "But yeah, if it sounds like something decent, I'll definitely look into it."

St. John, a junior in history who finished second in the polls, said he thought it would be good for Student Publications if Walker joined the

"He seems to be a dedicated person and I think he would probably do a good job if he were to join," St. John said. "When you think of athletes, you don't really think of them being involved with campus organizations. So in that respect, I think it would be awesome for him to join.

"Him being a future NBA star might be a little intimidating at first, but he seems to be down to earth and to have a good personality, so I think it would be easy to get used to."

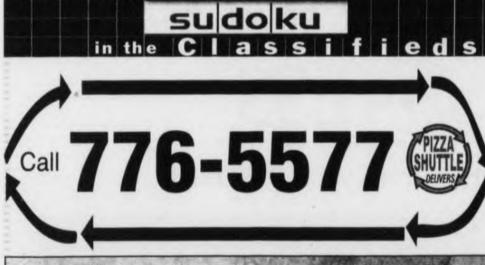

If Walker declines the position, Spencer said the board will then contact the fifthplace finishers and see who is interested.

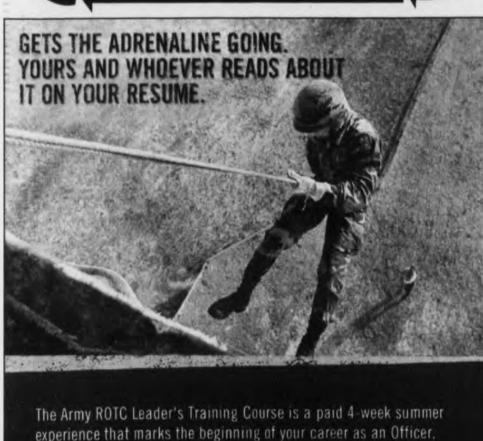

If he declines, teammate David Hoskins could have an opportunity to join the board. Hoskins was part of a fiveway tie for fifth place, collecting three write-in votes in the election.

Amnesty International to be host to awareness concert

By Hannah Blick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When students hear "free concert," thoughts of torture and the death penalty probably do not pop into most of their minds. However, K-State's chapter of Amnesty International will sponsor a human rights concert to address these topics from 4 to 11 p.m. today in Manhattan City Park.

The evening will begin with entertainment from DJ Alejandro Tudo Bem, followed by music from local bands like Squibcakes, Pazuzu Cabbage, Margo May, Kula Voyage, Squishbread and Violet Lights, the winner of Manhattan High School's recent "battle of the bands," said Robert Dunn, president of K-State's chapter of Amnesty International.

Dunn, junior in English, said although the concert is free of charge, there will be a raffle drawing, and the group will accept donations.

Also, there will be an opportunity to write letters and sign petitions concerning worldwide issues like women's rights, torture, prisoners of conscience, business and human rights, and the death penalty, Dunn said.

"It seems like it's difficult for people to realize that they can make a difference," Dunn said. "We're hoping this helps everyone to come together and feel like a part of something."

Representatives from Amnesty chapters at other colleges will be present to discuss these topics, their effects and what students can do to help.

Information tables will be set up in the park detailing the organization's mission and outreach, Dunn said.

"We want everyone to come out, enjoy the music, and just have a good time," Dunn said. "Hopefully this will give people something to think about, and raise some awareness."

In case of inclement weather, the concert will be in the City Park Pavilion. Otherwise, it will be on the outdoor stage in the park.

Amnesty International is one of the largest volunteer organizations advocating human rights around the world, with 15 chapters at Kansas colleges alone, said Sarah Mitts, senior in management and president of the K-State group.

"Amnesty International works to hold governments accountable to international law," Mitts said. "And we wanted to do something that was large enough to make an impact locally."

K-State's chapter of Amnesty International meets every other Monday at 6:30 p.m. The next meeting will be Monday at Bluestem Bistro in Aggieville.

Sports card, collectibles show returns to Manhattan Town Center Plaza

By Brian Tosh KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether looking for that elusive Barry Bonds rookie card or trying to replace the X-Men comic book missing since third grade, the Manhattan Town Center Plaza's bi-annual Sports Card, Comics and Collectibles show could be a good place to start the search.

Part of the Mo-Ark Sports and Collectibles show, the event will be tomorrow and Sunday, featuring more than 20 vendors from across the "Mo-Ark is in charge of finding all the vendors for the show," said Sara Van Allen, marketing manager for Manhattan Town Center. "The vendors change for each show, depending on who is available."

The show primarily will offer sports cards and other memorabilia ranging from NCAA sports, the NFL, NBA, MLB, NHL and NASCAR.

Van Allen said sports memorabilia typically ranges from jerseys to autographed equipment, and occasionally, vendors will bring in high-dollar

"In past years Mo-Ark has brought in players from various sports to meet their fans and sign autographs," Van Allen said. "Unfortunately, no players were available for the show this weekend."

Besides sport collectibles, vendors have brought items ranging from comic books and coins to Beanie Babies, Van Allen said.

"Basically anything that people see as collectible can be brought in," Allen said.

She said comic book fans can look forward to a large selection, while magazine collectors will have the opportunity to browse many hard-to-find editions.

"We won't know exactly what the show will have un til Friday, but in the past it has featured a wide variety of items," Van Allen said.

For attendees who do not want to buy anything, many vendors also will buy items or offer trades.

Governor signs legislation regulating funeral protests; courts left to decide constitutionality

By Carl Manning THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - The home state of the Rev. Fred Phelps and his followers, who protest military funerals nationally and say the deaths are God's punishment for the nation harboring homosexuals, now has a law regulating their activities, but it won't take effect until a court rules it is constitutional.

"I think it's important that Kansas step up and say this is not what we're about," Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said. "I'm hoping that people find this a strong message from the state."

The new law, which Sebelius signed Thursday, puts its enforcement on hold until the Kansas Supreme Court or a federal court declares it is val-

Legislators added that unusual provision to lessen concerns that Phelps and his followers from Westboro Baptist Church, of Topeka, would file a legal challenge, win and collect attorney fees from the state. Last year, lawmakers could not agree on the bill's scope and nothing passed.

But Shirley Phelps-Roper, the church's attorney, called the new law "absolutely worth-

"Their law fell so painfully short of hitting any mark. It accomplishes exactly nothing."

said Phelps-Roper, daughter of Fred Phelps.

The governor said she's confident the law will withstand court scrutiny.

It says protesters can't be within 150 feet of a funeral one hour before, during or two hours after the end of the service. Violators would face up to a $1,000 fine and six months in jail.

It also makes it unlawful to obstruct any public street or sidewalk and allows family members to sue if they feel protesters defamed the deceased an exception to the general rule of law that one cannot libel or slander the dead. Phelps-Roper said the new law won't stop their picketing because what they do won't be a violation.

"We are always more than 300 feet from the funeral site and always leave before the funeral starts," she said. "There is nothing about the law that has anything to do with us."

Senate Majority Leader Derek Schmidt, who helped craft the legislation, said he's not surprised by Phelps-Roper's opinion.

"Sounds like we have these folks agitated already. Our approach must be working," said Schmidt, R-Independence.

The University of Kansas

As she signed the bill, Sebelius was surrounded by about 50 members of the Patriot Guard, clad in black leather. The group of motorcyclists demonstrate against Phelps and his church, forming a human shield between families and picketers at funerals.

Also on hand was Brandy Sacco of Topeka whose husband, Army Sgt. Dominic Sacco, was killed in Iraq in 2005. She recalled that protesters from Westboro Baptist were at his funeral.

"I'm glad others won't have to go through the pain and agony I had to go through," she said. "It was awful. I couldn't fathom why people would do to take the necessary steps to get a court ruling on the bill's constitutionality. Phelps-Roper questioned whether that's a legitimate role for an attorney

The new law requires Attorney General Paul Morrison

"The minute they file a lawsuit, we will be there to intervene and ask the court to dismiss it," Phelps-Roper said.

Schmidt said the concept was borrowed from the state's redistricting law, which requires court approval before it can take effect.

The members of Westboro Baptist, a small fundamentalist congregation, say their protests are a form of religious expression protected by the Constitu-

After just 54 weeks, he's gone. It's all over, and it feels like a bad dream. I'm sure there are a lot of other students who feel the same. Can you give us any advice to help us heal? Can you offer us hope of the good things to come? I mean, he didn't even tell us goodbye himself. Thank you, CK.

> Signed, Knocked down, not out

Dear Knocked down, not out,

The moment I heard this departure announced in regard to our basketball program, I felt my Wildcat senses tingle in warning of such a question. As always, there is no reason to fear. I am happy to say that after much debate over your question, I have some advice that will allow you to move on with life and start shopping for next season's basketball tickets and apparel.

1. Help yourself heal. It will take time for the dust to settle, but the most important thing you can do is rid yourself of reminders. Instead of letting him stare at you from his poster on the wall, take some initiative, give him a tug and dispose of the poster. Also, make sure to dispose of any apparel, tickets, etc. you might have. I will not recommend a specific method, but keep in mind that naturally occurring elements can play special roles. I leave it in your capable hands.

2. Take a "time out." Although the weather has taken a strange turn since Huggins left, now is the opportune time to do something for yourself. To get your mind off things, make a trip to the movie theater, take up a new hobby or spend an extra hour at the Peters Recreation Complex. However, do not go overboard and try anything too drastic.

Without Huggins around, there is always hope that you may yet learn to love another! Anyone feel like a trip down to Martinville? Remember, take your chill pills, and keep those shoe laces tied.

If you need Crisis Kurt's help, please write to edge@spub.ksu.edu, ATTN: Crisis Kurt.

Sorority president uses leadership to improve Greek community

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The greek community at K-State is one of the long-standing foundations that seeks to bind tradition with continued excellence. The greek community encompasses more than 3,000 students, including 17 sororities and 30 fraternities, and has been an active face on campus since 1913.

Jessica Daniel said she always has been interested in being a part of that community. However, a sideline role never whetted her appetite. Instead, she actively became involved, not only for her individual chapter, but for the entire community, serving as sorority president at Pi Beta Phi and Panhellenic Council executive director of Interfraternal Communications.

A native of Topeka, Daniel is pursing a degree in business management, pre-law, with a minor in leadership studies. She said she hopes to become a divorce attorney, as she has been granted plenty of experience in conflict resolution during her sorority days.

Q: Why K-State?

A: Actually, my brother, who is a year older than me, came here, and I just kind of decided that wherever he goes, I would follow. He got a scholarship, and I got a scholarship. It was kind of a no-brainer.

Q: Did you always think you would go greek?

A: Yeah. I always just kind of knew it was something I would do. My dad actually told me he thought I would really enjoy it because he was in a fraternity. When I came up, I just didn't think twice.

Q: How did you deal with the infamous "Rush Week"?

A: I really liked recruitment. I don't know, I just had a really laid-back attitude towards it and really didn't get caught up in everything, and it worked to my advantage. I actually enjoyed it more going through recruitment than recruiting other people, because it's awkward to be a recruiter, the one who has to carry the conversation.

Q: Never having had a sister, how was it moving in with 86 girls?

A: It was interesting. I liked it because all of my friends are close. You know, it's fun to wake up in the morning and just see everyone. It's nice to have people around all the time.

Q: When did you start taking a leadership role in your sorority?

A: Probably my sophomore year. I was just song leader my freshman year. When it came time to elect (executive board), I became VP of communications for my sophomore and junior year, and now I am the president for this and next semester.

Q: Does that mean you will live in the house next semes-

A: I'll live in all year probably. It's just, why would you want to leave? Someone cooks for you, someone cleans for you and you get to be with all of your friends. You'll never have an experience like that again.

Q: Have you had any problems with other sororities?

A: No, I don't think so at all. When it comes down to it, we all realize that we are part of the same thing. We're all looking for the same thing out of our chapters — we just happen to have different names. I'm surprised when we get together how well we get along, especially being in other organizations with people who aren't within my chapter. I've made some of my best friends with girls who aren't in my chapter. It's just funny because people always think that you're only going to be friends with your chapter, but we're more similar than dissimilar.

Q: What is the commitment of being a president like?

A: It's a lot of hours. It's a lot of odds-and-ends hours that I wouldn't have expected to begin with, a lot of people coming in and asking questions, answering e-mails, dealing with nationals or regionals. It's a lot of extra little things that kind of keep adding up through the week, but I love it.

Q: How long do you see yourself staying involved?

A: I'm going for the long picture. I don't know if immediately out of college I'll be involved, since I'll be in law school, but but being a member of our alumni chapters is something that interests me in my future life and just always staying connected.

They always say that if you move somewhere new, you can always look up the club wherever you are and find other women and connect other places. So I definitely think that it's something that is a lifelong membership.

"It may seem strange to most people, but there are a lot of people with idiosyncratic personalities, or people who think outside the box, who are very open to these superstitions and unknown possibilities," said Meghann Wright, a psychology intern for K-State counseling services.

Rebecca Butler, a graduate student in theater, and superstition non-believer, was surprised by these statistics.

"I just don't understand why so many people are fearful enough of Friday the 13th to take such extreme measures," Butler said. "I refuse to believe that a specific day is responsible for accidents and mishaps."

Historically, there are no true dates or events to trace the origins of this day which leaves so many in fear. But there are many theories.

Dossey, a folklore historian and author of "Holiday folklore, phobias and fun," said some trace the fear of 13 back to a Norse myth about 12 gods having a dinner party at Valhalla, a name for their heaven. Loki, the mischievous and uninvited 13th guest, would later attend. At the party, Loki had Hoder, the blind god of darkness, shoot an arrow at Balder the Beautiful, the god of joy and gladness. According to the myth, Balder died and the whole Earth and mourned.

Others trace this "cursed" day to biblical references, Dossey said. Judas, the apostle who betrayed Jesus, was the 13th guest to the Last Supper. Friday is well-known among Christians as the day Jesus was crucified. Some scholars also believe Eve tempted Adam with the forbidden fruit on Friday and many say Cain killed Abel on Friday the 13th.

The fear of this day, and the number 13 itself, is still apparent in today's world. Dossey said som skyscrapers skip from 12 to 14 in numbering floors, and hotels and offices often avoid rooms numbered 13.

In the National Geographic article, Roach writes about Florence, Italy, where houses between numbers 12 and 14 are addressed as 12 and 1/2. In France, socialites known as the quatorziens (fourteeners) once made themselves available as 14th guests to keep a dinner party from an unlucky fate.

Many triskaidekaphobes, those who fear the number 13, acknowledge the ill-fated mission to the moon, Apollo 13.

One supposed remedy to avoid the plague of Friday the 13th is to climb to the top of a mountain or skyscraper and burn all the socks you own that have holes in them, Dossey said, and another is to stand on your head and eat a piece of gristle. But Wright has a more down-to-earth suggestion.

"If a superstition like this is taking over your life, probably the best thing you can do is find healthy distractions," Wright said. "Whether it's exercise or being with friends, taking your mind away from the phobia is the best way to prevent it from getting out of control."

FAREWELL | Professor looks forward to retirement

she was one of the youngest people in the department.

"The closest person on the faculty to my age was about 14 years older, which made it a rather isolating experience," Sloop said. But she was finally doing what she wanted.

After Sloop's first semester, though, the college's head of graduate work and theory courses suffered a heart attack.

"I felt as if somebody had dug a 6-foot hole and stuffed me in it," she said. "Everybody in those days had to wear many hats because there just weren't that many of us."

But despite her hectic teaching schedule, Sloop was able to squeeze in a few vocal performances — one of which led to her first, hands-on research opportunity.

In 1960, she was asked to sing at a banquet held in honor of Norman Cousins, the founder and editor of the weekly U.S.-based magazine, "The Saturday Review." Cousins enjoyed Sloop's performance so much, he gave her the opportunity to study at the Mozartarium in Salzburg, Austria, the following summer.

"It really rescued me at a time when I needed rescuing," she said.

Sloop spent eight weeks on her first experience abroad where she studied voice, witnessed top-notch performances and learned new vocal exercises. Upon her return to K-State, she applied her new-found knowledge to some of her classes.

This was before 1968, when the music department still was housed in Nichols Gym. Just as she thought everything was finally coming together, Sloop lost the contents of her studio in the Nichols fire on Friday, Dec.

"We lost everything," she said. "I had a colleague at the time who said, 'If that ever happened to me, I couldn't stand it.' One of the first things you discover is that you don't have a choice."

Eventually, Sloop and her colleagues picked up the pieces. McCain Auditorium was built, and Sloop said she was able to concentrate on her vocal students and her research.

"I realize that every institution has its pluses and minuses," Sloop said, "but K-State has been a wonderful place for me to work. It's so fascinating to see the growth factor of this institution, which is still ongoing."

Sloop said even though she has loved her work here, it's time for her to retire. Her plans include cataloguing her entire music library, going more indepth with her vocal literature study, publishing an Italian translation book for future vocal students, writing poetry and memoirs, and dabbling in painting and photography.

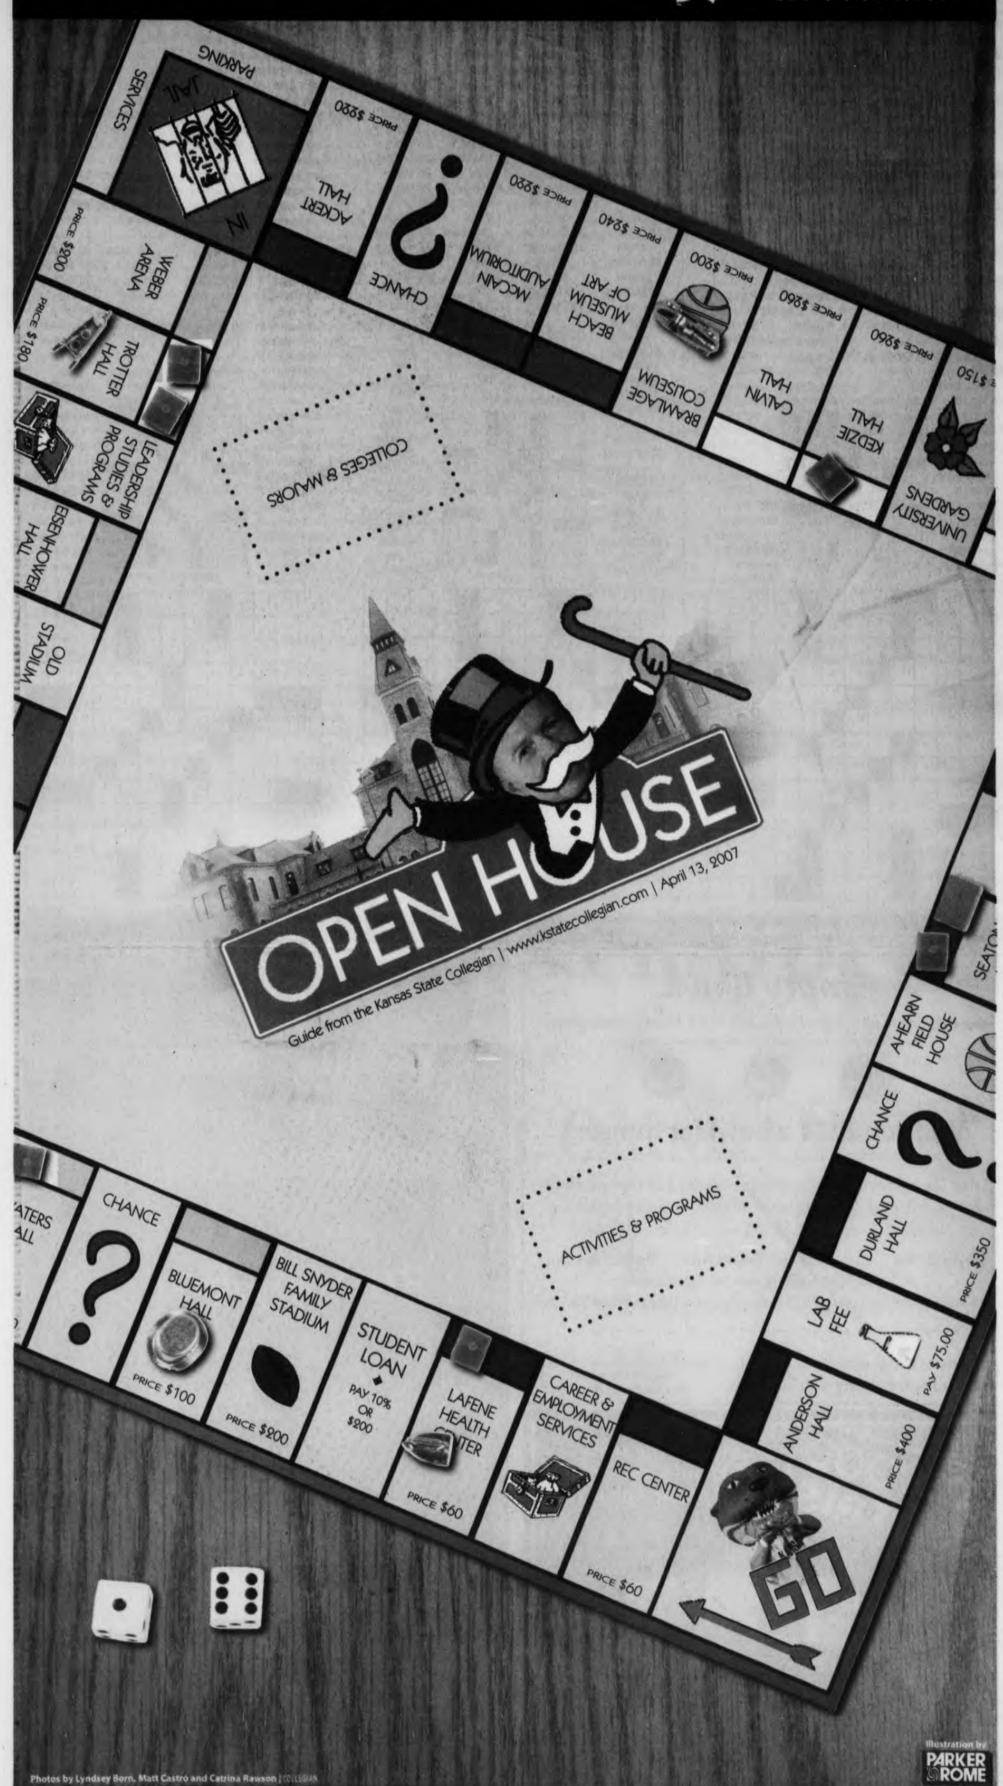

"I'm really looking forward to (my retirement)," she said, "because I want the opportunity of rising again to the level of my own intelligence. There are things that I want to do on my level, not at a teaching level, that otherwise I don't have time to do."

Open House offers activities for current, prospective students

Elise Podhajsky KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will present its annual All-University Open House from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

Throughout the weekend, each college will provide a variety of entertainment and activities for prospective and current students and their families to learn more about each department and, more generally, life at K-State.

Shuttles will leave from the admissions booth in the K-State Student Union every half-hour to take visitors around campus.

Shea Larson, student coordinator of the student core committee for Open House, said the committee members wanted a new and exciting theme this year - something all of the colleges could use and expand "Experience the Wilds of College Life" was born.

"The general atmosphere of Open House is an incredible thing," said Larson, senior in communications sciences and disorders. "Every single act going on that day adds to the atmosphere, which is the best thing about Open House."

Larson said Open House is the school's biggest recruitment event of the year. It also is a way for students to explore different majors and organizations throughout campus, with events taking place all day.

Some of the events, which are not department-oriented, include free online career assessments, student life and special tours, special receptions for students and parents, performances and activities at the Union and the various activities each college sponsors throughout the day.

Kappa Delta welcomes you to Open House!

Saturday, April 14

Online career assessments will be available every hour starting at 10 a.m. Saturday, designed to aid current and prospective students in the process of finding a major.

Attendees also can tour university facilities, including Peters Recreation Complex, Hale Library, the K-State Alumni Center, the Beach Museum of Art and the Biosecurity Research Institute as a part of the student life and special tours. Many of these buildings will offer activities for visitors, as well.

Special receptions will take place in the K-State Student Union for current and prospective students and families to enjoy refreshments and learn more about the different admissions options available for each student. There will be a reception for out-of-state, multicultural, transfer and military students and families.

The Union Program Council will sponsor various performances and entertainment, beginning at 7 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium with a presentation from Discovery Channel's hit show, "MythBusters."

"We wanted something that would be family friendly and a fun event for K-State students and families who are in town on Friday," said Kyle Malone, UPC co-chairman and junior in political science. "We'd been toying with the idea of having the 'MythBusters' come since summer. It is a pretty popular show, and we thought people would enjoy it."

Even though the show's costars, Kari Bryon and Grant Imahara, will not be busting any myths on stage, Malone said they will discuss their mythbusting experiences in a format similar to "Inside the Actor's Studio."

The presentation will be about 30 minutes of DVD clips and show bloopers and 30 minutes of questions and answers.

Outside, on Bosco Student Plaza, UPC is sponsoring the 2007 Variety Show. The variety show will showcase some of Manhattan's local talent, with bands including John Bostwick, the Mikey Needleman Band and The Ruckus.

The K-State pep band, an international parade and the Marching Cobras of Kansas City - a high-energy drum corps and drill team - also will be part of the variety show.

"We have a lot of old favorites, as well as some new things our departments and colleges have put together to add a little bit of a twist this year," said Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life. "I anticipate we're going to have a great crowd, if the weather holds."

Lehning said it is hard to estimate the exact number of people who attend Open House each year because it is such a big event. But, she said, she determines the success by the hundreds of smiling and laughing faces she sees throughout the day and the interaction between prospective and current K-State students.

"It's really neat to see the different generations," she said. "You'll see families coming with young children in strollers to grandparents and everyone in between."

Open House to feature array of entertainment

'Mythbusters,' variety show talent provide attendees with an eclectic range of activities

By Nicole Johnston KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will feature entertainment at its All-University Open House to show current and future students the diversity and various options available on campus.

"We want everyone to have an opportunity to enjoy something at Open House," said Donnie Hampton, Open House entertainment cochair.

The Open House entertainment committee tried to plan events showcasing the diversity of K-State's campus, Hampton said.

"A lot of people don't know that we are a very diverse campus, so we like to show that," he said.

The events start Friday night with an appearance from Kari Byron and Grant Imahara, stars from the TV show "Mythbusters," at 7 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Tickets are free for students, and $6 for non-students, said Beth Bailey, assistant director at the K-State Student Union.

"They will talk about their experiences, and there will be a question-and-answer time, so it should be a good time," she said.

Students can pick up tickets at the McCain box office. Although tickets are free, Bailev said attendees still need one to get into the show.

The show is just one of many events taking place as part of the festivities.

The K-State pep band will play at 9:30 a.m. Saturday outside the Union, followed by John Bostwick at 10 a.m., the Mikey Needleman Band at 10:45 a.m. and the Kansas City Marching Cobras at Hampton said there also will be an international parade with dance groups, flags and international campus groups.

"The bands we decided on are much more inviting and enjoyable than just one genre of music," Hampton said.

The Mikey Needleman Band returns this year for its second performance at Open House.

"I really liked playing the Open House last year, because it is a lot of new faces and parents," said Needleman, senior in social science. "I got to meet a lot of people I wouldn't normally meet."

Needleman said being a student at K-State has shown him what opportunities K-State has to offer.

The first time he came to K-State, he said he knew it was the right university for him.

"There is so much of a spectrum of things to do here," Needleman said. "Arts and studies, so many different cultures, and hopefully the newcomers will see that this is one aspect of K-State they can enjoy and that there are many more experiences to encounter."

With such a wide spectrum of entertainment options, the hope is that Open House will have something to offer for everyone, demonstrating what K-State is about, Hamp-

"K-State equals family," Hampton said. "You will see so many different things, how diverse we are, not only with the colleges, but with everything. It shows everyone how cool we are. We want the music to be lively like K-State is.

"Coming to K-State at Open House, I was really excited, and I hope the new comers have the same feelings that I did."

I spent the day hearing about majors I was interested in, classes to take and how to become involved on campus. But I was wiggling around in my seat like a 5 year old during church.

The day was coming to a close, and although I still was unsure if I wanted to go to K-State, my parents convinced me to spend some time walking around

That day, K-State was offering campus tours to prospective students. A young woman found my family and me wandering around and asked if we would be interested in seeing the ins and outs of the university. I was hesitant, but my parents agreed before I could turn

Some people like to step out on their own and take the "self-guided" tour. I applaud these independent individuals, and although they might have grown up as a Wildcat, having family attend K-State for years, new events, activities and programs constantly are happening at K-State.

Here's my advice - take a tour. Even if you know a lot about K-State, there's more to learn and people standing by to help. Having someone else show you around will enhance your experience guaranteed.

Several campus facilities offering guided tours for Open House

By Sarah Rasmussen KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tours to help inform guests about what is new at K-State will be available at the All-University Open House this

The Beach Museum of Art will showcase exhibits, including "A Decade and a Year: Annual Major Acquisitions" by the Friends of the Beach Museum of Art in the Helm Gallery and "Children and their Art" in the Hempler Gallery, both from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The Student Friends of the Beach Museum of Art will have a landscape drawing workshop for all ages from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Refreshments will be provided.

Liz Bird, treasurer of Student Friends, said this will be the third year for the landscape drawing workshop.

"We do them every year for Open House, but they are different every year," said Bird, senior in family and consumer education teacher certification requirements, said.

Hale Library will have two official guided tours. The tours will immediately follow story time, which is for children. Story times begin at 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Dan Ireton, circulation staff member at Hale, said the tours will not be intrusive to students who might be using the library to study.

"We're going to try to briefly cover all five floors," Ireton said. "We're trying to do a fun overview, and we'll have signs posted around the library to showcase different types of architecture that (Hale) has been through."

Ireton also said Hale will have an "information oasis," a sampling of material available for check-out, in the grassy area between Hale and the English and Counseling Services building.

There will not be official tours of Chalmers Hall, but there will be a table in the K-State Student Union to showcase what is happening in the departments it houses. There will be information about microbiology, fisheries and wildlife biology, along with general biology information.

The Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society and the Microbiology Club will have tables in the Union with microscopes of flower beetles and animal displays.

The new Biosecurity Research Institute will have tours from 9 a.m. to noon at Roberts

Hall (next to the veterinary complex) to promote plant, animal and human health and safety. People will be able to see a virtual tour showcasing high-tech features.

To look for safety threats, the institute can simulate anything from a restaurant kitchen to a plane's cargo hold, according to K-State's Open House Web site, www.consider.k-state.edu/openhouse.

Peters Recreation Complex is another stop to make during the day, said Steve Martini, director of the rec. Student employees will be available all day to give tours and answer questions.

"We will have extra staff on duty for Open House especially to give tours and answer any questions that people might have for us," Martini said. "We don't have any special events out here because there are so many other events happening on campus."

The K-State Alumni Center also will be open to visitors during Open House.

Highlights of the building include an aquarium filled with purple fish, the K-State Memorabilia Room, the original Bluemont Arch from 1859 and a bronze Wildcat statue.

Along with other tours, campus walking tours will leave every half hour from the admissions booth in the Union, and shuttles will leave from the south side of the Union every 15 minutes.

The shuttles will stop at Justin Hall, the Derby complex, the veterinary medicine complex, University gardens, the Jardine apartment complex, the rec and West Stadi-

Showing livestock

Little American Royal gives students from all majors opportunity to show animals in exhibition

By Mandy Stark KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's All-University Open House, one of the university's biggest events, draws thousands of people to the Little Apple for a day full of purple-inspired activities.

Most events showcase the activities and achievements of students in specific majors or colleges. Very few events are open to students from any major, no experience required.

On the far side of campus, however, weeks of preparation and training will pay off for students participating in one such event. More than 100 students will compete in K-State's 79th-annual Little American Royal livestock show.

Sponsored by K-State's Block and Bridle and Dairy Science clubs, the LAR is a showmanship contest where students are judged on their ability to present and groom an animal after about a month of preparation, said Christine Soukup, senior in animal science and industry and president of Block and Bridle.

"LAR is basically a takeoff of the American Royal Livestock, Horse Show and Rodeo in Kansas City, Mo.," Soukup said.

"This is a great opportunity for students who don't have showing experience to come out and have a good

K-State owns the animals, which makes this competition different from most livestock shows, Soukup said. Students can choose to work with beef or dairy cattle, sheep, swine or horses.

"Ordinarily, competitors work regularly with an animal they own for a show," Soukup said, "but only having a month to work with it makes it more equal. Novices can beat experienced showmen."

The College of Agriculture does more for Open House than many other colleges, said Lindsay Graber, sophomore in agricultural communications and journalism and College of Agriculture Open House coordinator.

"I encourage people to come out and see what we do," Graber said. "At the LAR, people can see an event that really represents one of K-State's largest majors."

Graber said people unfamiliar with livestock can learn a lot from the show.

"For me, showing livestock is not a big deal because I have for 12 years," Graber said. "But for people who are accustomed to dogs and cats, it's a great experience. Working with a lamb or steer is very different from teaching a dog to sit."

Graber encouraged people who do not have experience with livestock to watch the show and participate next year. She said experienced students teach novices how to show their animals.

"There aren't any other chances for college students to learn to show livestock and be judged in a setting that's competitive and fun at the same time," Graber said.

First place, or the grand champion, in each species will receive a belt buckle, while the reserve champion, or second place, will win a folding director's chair, said Melinda Tebow, senior in animal science and industry and one of Block and Bridle's LAR representatives.

Two participants also will win a $100 scholarship, based on financial need, academic achievement and on-campus leadership. Tebow said the American Royal Livestock, Horse Show and Rodeo, RB Outpost, Valley Vet Supply and Syndicate Club Lambs all contributed to the prizes.

Tebow said people should watch the show to see something different from other offerings at Open House.

"The LAR showcases what animal science majors do, especially showing, and it provides people that may not see livestock often a chance to get close," Tebow said. "It's a change from all the booths and exhibits."

K-State architecture, planning, design students to show solar-powered house in D.C. this fall

By Kendra Stiles KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design will showcase a solar-powered house as part of the All-University Open House Sat-

Students are partnering with a team from the University of Kansas to design and build the house as part of an international competition called the Solar Decathlon, which includes 20 university teams from the United States, Spain, Germany, Canada and Puerto Rico.

A select number of teams are awarded entry to the competition after submitting proposals to a committee. Todd Gabbard, faculty adviser to Project Solar House, said the students do all of the conceptualization and building. Faculty members only help administer the project.

"It's an inter-disciplinary project," said Gabbard, assistant professor of architecture. "It's very similar to a real-life building project because students from different disciplines are all working to-

After the completion of the project, the house will be shipped to Washington, D.C., where it will be on display with entries from other teams. Gabbard said more than 120,000 people went to look at the display in 2005. This, however, is the first year a team from Kansas has participated.

"No team from K-State has ever participated in the competition," he said. "And there haven't been any teams from KU to participate, but there have been a couple of schools in Missouri that have participated in the past."

Brad Lutz, senior in electrical engineering, is the vice president of the project and is helping to design the solar panels for the house. Lutz said he is excited to take the project to Washington to show it off.

"I'm very excited because I've been working on this said. "I think I'm most excited about going to Washington in the fall and meeting with the public to teach them about it.

Gabbard said the houses will be judged in 10 different categories, including looks, living quality, design and the ability to cook meals, do laundry and shower. Most of the contests are centered around proving the houses can function normally.

Ryan Haugaard, senior in interior design, said he has enjoyed and learned the most by working with students from other fields of study.

"I'd like to aim for the stars and hope we win," Haugaard project for over a year," he said. "But every day has been a learning experience. It's been good to see all the synergies of different fields coming together."

> Gabbard said the idea behind displaying the house at Open House is to give incoming students and parents an idea of what K-State students are capable of accomplish-

> "It's unfortunate that the house won't be further along," Gabbard said. "But we want to show the kind of stuff K-State students are doing. And they're doing a great job."

According to the Solar Decathlon 2007 Web site, the competition will be Oct. 12-20 in Washington, D.C.

Glassblowing, pottery demonstrations to be presented to Open House visitors

By Katelynn Hasler KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Glassblowing, metalsmithing and pottery-wheel demonstrations are among the skills to be presented by the art and chemistry departments for this year's All-University Open House.

The Department of Chemistry will present the glassblowing demonstration, along with several other demonstrations, in an effort to create awareness of the department's activities and to attract new students, said Chris Levy, associate professor of chemistry.

The Department of Art will have promotional demonstrations, said Sara Nettleingham, art adviser, but students also will sell pottery, paintings and jewelry they created as group fundraisers

"As a department, this helps people see what our students can really do," Nettleingham said. "I think the demonstrations are really interesting for people just to see students actually doing their craft."

The art department's displays and demonstrations will be outside of the K-State Student Union Bookstore on Saturday.

Students will throw pottery pieces and create jewelry and small metal pieces in front of viewers

Student groups for both crafts will sell pieces at the art booth. Painting students also will sell paintings on small wooden blocks.

The proceeds from the art sales will go to activities and trips for the student art groups selling them, Nettleingham said.

The chemistry department also will have a demonstration in the Union, which will be geared toward children, Levy said.

Members of the chemistry fraternity, Alpha Sigma Chi, will create slime.

In Willard Hall, members of the same fraternity will present magic shows.

"We've done many of these presentations before," Levy

"But this is the first year in a long time that we've brought the events out of the Union and back over to our department for people to see what we really

K-State's senior master glassblower, Jim Hodgson, will give the glassblowing demonstration in King Hall. Hodgson creates custom glass apparatuses used on campus for scientific purposes.

He has been with the department for about 10 years, he said, and has performed glass-blowing demonstrations at Open House for several years.

In his presentation, Hodgson will demonstrate basic glassblowing techniques and speak about the purposes of scientific glass and how it is made.

"These events give us a better way to be in contact with the public, especially high-school seniors," Levy said. "We can use all of this as a recruiting tool by showing people around, showing them what we do and getting them a little more aware of what our program's all about."

College of Agriculture to offer free food

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Agriculture is an annual contributor to the All-University Open House, offering exhibits and giveaways to advertise what makes its college special.

"We do a great job every year," said Sharon Thielen, event coordinator for the college.

Thielen also said the scavenger hunt would be making its return this year.

"We have a scavenger hunt that takes the students all around campus, and then there is a free T-shirt at the end," she said.

The Department of Grain free food. Cotton candy, pop-

Science and Industry will offer attractions during the all-day event. Four tickets to Country Stampede Music Festival will be raffled – one set at noon and the other at about 1 p.m.

To highlight the exclusive degrees in milling science, the college will offer tours of its new feed mill.

The Department of Grain Science and Industry also will be showcasing its new pancake mix. Throughout the day, mini pancakes made from the new mix will be given away.

In the lawn in front of Water's Hall, the college will be giving away various types of corn and soda will be among the snacks available.

Current students are excited for Open House to see what their university has to offer. Ryan Fritz, junior in finance, said he is looking forward to seeing what the college will have available.

"I am really excited about the things that are happening this year at Open House," Fritz said. "I did the scavenger hunt my freshman year, and I had a good time doing that"

In all areas, members of the college's faculty and staff will be available to discuss the exhibits and careers offered in their respective department.

Carnival geared for youth

College uses events for long-term recruitment

By Kendra Stiles KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Business Administration is having a carnival as part of its All-University Open House festivities Saturday.

Jacob Will, business council vice president and Open House committee chair, said the carnival is geared toward youth, but there will be information provided for any highschool students who express interest in K-State.

"We're gearing this for younger kids," said Will, senior in management. "Most high-school students already know where they want to go to school, so we're trying to appeal more to junior-high or middle-school students. But we will have prizes and things for high-school students and booths with information."

William Lopez, business council president, said Open House is a good opportunity for the college to recruit new students.

"This is one of our main recruiting tools," said Lopez, junior in finance. "We use this to really get our name out there. As many as 20,000 people can come to the university events. so this can make a huge impact. We want to try to hook kids when they're young and turn them into Wildcats.

Pesci said there is a demand for people who are skilled in ice carving.

"We're talking about ice carvings that can be very intricate," he said. "It's a real art if you can do that, and people have all types of power tools."

Students to showcase designs in Lego robotics competition

By Megan Molitor KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students from around the state will have the opportunity to show off their creations at the College of Education's Robotics League Competition.

The competition will take place Saturday as part of K-State's All-University Open House. Because of space constraints, it will be at Anthony Middle School, 2501 Browning Ave.

Bill Rust, creator of the Robotics League, said elementary, middle-school and high-school students will build robots for the competition using Lego Mindstorms kits. The students will pit the robots against each other in games including a maze, capture the flag and king of the hill.

"It's all about building robots and programming them, and seeing who does it best," Rust said.

He said the competition usually draws many entrants.

"We don't know how many we will have until registration," Rust said. "However, we had 250 from all over the state last year, and already (have) 60 from Kansas City that we know of this year."

Rust said he started the program about eight years ago with his co-creator, Kevin Kramer.

"I saw a Lego Mindstorms kit in a toy store and thought it would be a good way to experience hands-on engineering for kids," Rust said.

Rust, who still is involved in the competition, said he brought the Lego kits to local schools for students to use. Eventually, the College of Education started paying for the project.

"We've been working with schools ever since," he said.

League meet info

Elementary, middle and high school robotics teams will design robots using Lego Mindstorms kits and compete in seven events to test the students' programming and robot design skills. The competition will be from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Susan B. Anthony Middle School, 2501

College of Engineering students to exhibit student projects, building renovations

By Lacey D. Mackey KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ray Hightower, assistant professor and assistant dean of the College of Engineering, said the college will have its usual parade and opening ceremonies today, but the ceremony will take place in a slightly different location: at the engineering plaza, east of Durland Hall.

The parade, an annual tradition, will take place from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m.

With a newly remodeled lobby and improvements made to the outside of Durland, Hightower said the college will show perspective students and alumni the changes around the engineering buildings – changes recommended by K-State students.

The theme of the college's own Open House is "Better, Smarter, Faster, Stronger."

"You might say those are goals for engineering as a benefit to society," Hightower said. "We want to show that engineering is emulating all of those words."

Hightower said the college also will have highschool contests in each department tonight, like the Department of Architectural Engineering's competition to construct a building from gum drops and toothpicks.

Students from each department in the college also will have displays of their work set up.

A concrete canoe built by a student team in the Department of Civil Engineering will be on display. Students in the Department of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering will display student designs, including a formula car, aero design, a mini-Baja car and a solar car. Visitors also will have the opportunity to visit with students performing research in mechanical and nuclear labs.

Hightower said the Department of Industrial and Manufacturing Systems Engineering will display systems various engineering companies have created for everyday life.

The Department of Computing and Information Sciences will have a robotics competition from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. tomorrow. Hightower said the competition is a demonstration for visitors.

"Everything is aimed at the public at all ages," he

Vet Med to have pet show featuring students' animals

By Monica Castro KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rain or shine, the College of Veterinary Medicine will celebrate the All-University Open House with a pet show at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at Trotter Hall.

Several types of pets will compete for various prizes.

"There are mostly dogs and cats competing," said Melissa Haase, third-year veterinary medicine student. "But there are two rabbits and even a snake in the show."

Yaicha Peters, first-year veterinary medicine student, said the pets belong to students in the college.

Haase said each of the pet owners were able to choose from a range of categories in which to enter their pet.

Some of the categories include best trick, best costume and even a beauty con-

"There is even a looka-like contest because you know how there are some pets that take on personal features like their owners," Haase said.

Other categories common to the show include the smallest and largest dog, the overall best in show and crowd favorite, in the spirit of "Miss Congeniality" beauty pageant awards, Haase said.

The audience will vote in all categories to select the winners.

The college also will have a 'most inspiring story' contest, in which the pet owners will tell the story of how they adopted or obtained their pet.

The pet show is being sponsored by several locally owned businesses.

"We were overwhelmed with donations," Haase said.

including Companies Claire & Harley's, Pizza Hut, Jimmy John's, Blockbuster Video and Pita Pit have donated prizes for the winners of the pet show as well.

Salon Essentials also will donate a prize for the beauty contest winner, Haase said.

"The purpose of the pet show is to entertain kids and families," she said. "A lot of the people that come to the vet show are prospective

Salina to provide hands-on opportunities at Open House

By Hannah Blick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina is offering hands-on attractions this spring at the All-University Open House, including flight lessons in the university jet and water balloon target practice with the Cat Cannon, said Katie Mayes, coordinator of public and alumni relations for the Salina campus.

Salina houses the College of Technology and Aviation. Students and faculty have been working hard to get everything ready for Open House this week, Mayes said.

"This is a great opportunity for everybody to show what they've been working on all year," Mayes said. "The students in Salina don't always receive a lot of recognition, but they take pride in sharing what they do."

According to the K-State Web site, the day will begin at 8 a.m. with a Wildcat flyin pancake feed, where guests will have the chance to interact with K-State pilots and mechanics, followed by a "Wings" safety seminar.

Throughout the day, there also will be chemistry and physics lab demonstrations, a computer equipment bashing session and the opportunity to witness the famous floating concrete canoe in action. From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., K-State students will have a hot dog sale, and Call Hall's "purple pride" ice cream will be available for visitors, Mayes said.

Several other activities offered will span a wide range of interests. Visitors can take pictures with the campus' aircraft fleet, create their own K-State key-chain souvenir or even play "Guitar Hero" in the residence hall and Phi Delta Theta lobbies, as listed on the K-State Web site.

One new addition to this year's Open House lineup is "car-hopping," Mayes said. This event consists of K-State students filming members of the public as they "hop" over a car, and then piecing the images together to make the person appear to be literally leaping over a car, as a sort of optical illusion. Mayes said she is hoping this kind of hands-on involvement will draw interest to the campus.

"We're hoping to get some kids out there, having fun and learning," Mayes said. "I also hope our students walk away with a sense of connection to the community."

Open House activities will be from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday at the Salina cam-

K-State departments, organizations welcome visitors at Open House

By Brett King KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's All-University Open House allowed students to showcase their activities and accomplishments to prospective students and members of the community

On Saturday, members of Alpha Chi Sigma, a chemistry honor fraternity, demonstrated experiments to parents and children as part of the Open House activities.

Many of the experiments drew strong responses from the audience. Spectators said they were impressed by a demonstration that gave the appearance of blood on paper.

After dipping his hand in ammonia, Tony Kuckelman, junior in secondary education, smeared it across goldenrod paper. The chemical reaction of ammonia to the paper creates a thick red color resembling blood.

The Alpha Chi Sigma show has been part of the Open House program for many years. Kuckelman said students present the show many times a year for local schools and other programs in the community.

"Many of the things we do are done with acid-base indicators," he said. "It's adding an acid or a base and unbalancing the chemical equilibrium to get the desired colors."

All of the props and experiments come from chemistry demonstration books to ensure safety. Kuckleman said all of the demonstrations are controlled to prevent any mishaps, which could occur when setting off explosions.

The final demonstration literally shook the walls, when students detonated a balloon filled with oxygen and hydrogen gas.

On the other side of campus in Durland Hall, the K-State Robotic Competition Team exhibited its latest projects.

The group displayed a robot it will

Sunny skies helped bring crowds of people to the outdoor events at K-State's All-University Open House on Saturday.

Several activities took place on Bosco Plaza outside the K-State Student Union, including music and specialty acts.

The Mikey Needleman Band began the variety show at 11:30 a.m. with a mix of popular songs.

The Manhattan Music Coalition, which works to promote local bands, sponsored the area bands that played at Open House, said Sarah Cunnick, MMC member.

"We've been working to help and support the Union Program Council," she said. "The Mikey Needleman Band, along with many others, will be performing at P.J.'s Bar all Groups of people danced in front of the stage, surrounded by both the music and the sunny weather.

Caressa Goehner, junior at Atchison High School, said she was touring the campus with her school's Upward Bound program.

"It's been really fun so far, and I'm having a great time," Goehner said. "The Mikey Needleman Band threw one of their drumsticks, and I caught it, which was really cool."

Individuals of all ages received purple and white balloons, and parents lifted up their children to give high-fives to the K-State Big Cats.

Prospective students created a sea of purple and orange K-State folders and waited for Saturday's special entertainment, the Marching Cobras.

another prominent K-State figure had the opportunity to take a job at the same institution.

Though West Virginia named Provost Duane Nellis a finalist for the position of university president, he was not chosen for the position and will remain at K-State.

"I appreciate all of the support and encouragement K-Staters have provided as I explored this opportunity," he said. "I look forward to continuing my work as provost and remain strongly committed to Kansas State University."

In a statement released to the K-State community, President Jon Wefald said he was pleased Nellis was remaining at K-State.

"Duane Nellis has done a terrific job over the past 3 1/2 years," Wefald said. "It is very rare to find a provost as qualified, as talented, as caring, and as effective as Duane Nellis. I am very pleased that Duane will remain as our provost, our colleague and a great friend."

A K-State graduate and former Kansas Secretary of Human Resources died in a car accident Friday night on U.S. Highway 75 in Woodson County, Kan.

Wayne Franklin, father of K-State men's basketball walk-on James Franklin, was killed when a hydroplaning truck slammed into the passenger-side door of the car in which he was riding, according to a Kansas City Star article.

His wife, Ethel, who also was in the vehicle, suffered injuries but was released from the hospital on Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said Franklin was a valued member of the K-State family.

"Wayne Franklin was a tremendous K-Stater," Bosco said. "He was a great father and a wonderful human being."

Franklin was active in student government while at K-State. He was a pastor in Olathe and spent time helping children through

ALASKAN FISHERMEN CATCH GIANT 90-YEAR-OLD FISH

ANCHORAGE, Alaska commercial fishing boat hauled in what may have been one of the oldest creatures in Alaska: a giant rockfish estimated to be about a century old.

The catcher-processor Kodiak Enterprise reeled in the 44-inch, 60pound female shortraker rockfish last month by as it trawled for pollock 2,100 feet below the surface, south of the Pribilof Islands in the Bering Sea.

Scientists at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration at the Alaska Fisheries Science Center in Seattle measured, photographed and documented the fish. They removed an ear bone, the otolith, which contains growth rings similar to rings in the trunks of trees. They estimate the rockfish was 90 to 115 years old.

NEW YORK COUPLE TO TAKE CAB TO ARIZONA RETIREMENT

NEW YORK - Betty and Bob Matas have retired and are moving to Arizona, but like many New Yorkers, they don't drive, and they don't want their cats to travel all that way in an airliner cargo hold.

Their solution: "Hey, cabbie."

They met taxi driver Douglas Guldeniz when they hailed his cab after a shopping trip several weeks ago. They got to talking about their upcoming move, and, "we said 'Do you want to come?" said Bob Matas, 72, a former audio and video engineer for advertising agencies. "And he said 'Sure."

They plan to leave Tuesday on the 2,400-mile trip to Sedona, Arizona., with Guldeniz driving his yellow SUV cab 10 hours a day for a flat fee of $3,000, plus gas, meals and lodging.

WOMAN SELLING BELONGINGS ON EBAY FOR FRESH START

ST. PAUL, Minnesota - For a fresh start, one woman has decided to sell nearly all of her belongings in one massive auction on eBay.

Lisa Perry, 45, said the top bidder in the auction, ending Thursday, will get more than 300 items - she's only keeping her dog, her cat, photo albums and some clothing.

Perry has worked as a lawyer in Montana, a communications professor in Mankato, Minn., and a bookseller in North Carolina. She now delivers subpoenas and legal documents. In June, she plans to move west, possibly to take up creative writing or holistic healing.

"I've been schlepping this stuff across the country for more than 20 years," she said. "I'm tired of thinking: 'Oh my God, what if it breaks in the next move?' Who cares? I think it will almost be scary how liberating it will be."

POLICE SAY SERIAL CAR THIEF JUST WANTED GASOLINE

YANGON, Myanmar - A serial car thief who stole 11 vehicles in six months was only after the fuel, which is severely rationed in the military-run former Burma, a police source said Tuesday.

Police caught Maung Myo Win red-handed last month as he was trying to climb into a minivan in downtown Yangon, the Myanmarlanguage Crime Journal reported.

Private car owners in the southeast Asian nation, which has been under military rule for 45 years, are allowed to buy 60 gallons of fuel a month at 1,500 kyat ($1.22) per gallon from state-owned filling stations. If they need more, they have to resort to the black market, where petrol sells at about 4,200 kyat a gallon.

The set consists of whatever there is in the host's apartment, except for a few imported props. The audience has ranged from 12 to 40 people, depending on the size of the apartment.

Deanna Wood, artist of the exhibit "Seeking Shelter," looks at a piece of her work with Colleen Cook of Lenexa, Kan., Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center. Wood's exhibit will be on display until May 26.

Artist displays work inspired by tornadoes, severe weather

By Monico Castro KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A collection of work inspired by dangerous weather is on display at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The arts center, 1520 Poyntz Ave., will be host to "Seeking Shelter," a collection of work by artist Deanna Wood, until May 26

Wood, a Texas native, said she was inspired to become an artist at a young age. She always enjoyed being around creativity and talking to artists and about their work.

After about 14 years of work as a graphic designer, Wood started painting regularly in 2000. She then went back to school to get her master's degree in fine arts for painting. Since then, she has painted for about two years.

Wood got the idea for the "Seeking Shelter" show while she was completing her degree, and she used it for her final show.

The pieces in the show took her about six months to compile, she said.

Wood said her inspiration for a storm theme came from her memories of having dreams about tornadoes.

"I have dreams about tornadoes when I was younger and lived in Lenexa, (Kan.), when I was about five," Wood said. "It was a combination of that and seeing 'The Wizard of Oz.' It affected me ever since I had those dreams."

Wood said her artwork used imagery of houses and telephone poles to symbolize human creation and how a natural force like a tornado can demolish people and objects in a sec-

The house shapes that can be seen in many of the art pieces represent shelter, home and safety.

"This art is dramatic, like a tornado," said Michaeline Chance-Reay, assistant professor of elementary education. "It reminds you of Dorothy's house flying through the air."

Chance-Reay said she thought all the work represented a good artistic interpretation of tornadoes.

"I think it's great. If you're from Kansas, you like the subject of tornadoes," said Tess Purvis, director of marketing and programs for the center. "It is nice to see that as a theme, that there is beauty in them and not just destruction."

Wood said she used encaustic techniques to create the various pieces, which involved melting beeswax with damar crystals to create the waxy look on the surface.

All the pieces displayed at the show are for sale. Pieces that are about one square foot in area cost about $900.

Wood's show has also been featured in galleries in Oklahoma, Nevada and Ohio.

Kelsey Lackey, senior in kinesiology, takes trash back to a trash bag after picking it up along the shore line of Carnahan Creek during the Alpha Phi Omega clean up Saturday afternoon.

Service fraternity cleans creek area

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many students were cleaning up after the All-University Open House Saturday evening, about 20 miles away, another group of students was cleaning a less heavily trafficked site.

About 20 students in the K-State chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, a co-ed, national community-service fraternity, helped clean the Carnahan Creek area on the eastern side of Tuttle Creek Lake.

The evening did not get off to a favorable start, with one of the members almost hitting a pole with his car, but Kyle Gach, senior in mechanical engineering, said overall the clean-up went well.

"It's the most trash we've picked up," Gach said, "but I don't know if that's a good thing or a bad thing."

Looking for trash along the creek shoreline, the group filled more than five trash bags of items ranging from beer bottles to rib bones to roof shingles.

Maya Pettit-Scott, president of APO, said the group members help clean up the area every semester. She said the project gives the members a chance to help the environment and meet other group members.

"It is definitely the favorite activity of the group," said Pettit-Scott, senior in nutrition science. "We get to clean up the area and hang out with other members, which usually doesn't happen."

She said although the clean-up is the group's favorite activity, it is not its only project. Members also are involved with charities like the Boys and Girls Clubs of America and the Salvation Army.

"Any venue that needs help, we go out and help," she said. "We are a big group and we have a lot of people we need to help."

Anderson,

in marketing, said the group can provide opportunities for students to which they might not have had access in their hometowns.

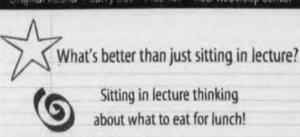

"It's really got me involved in the community," he said. "I never had an outlet before, and it's really helped me." The group also provides an opportunity for members to gain leadership roles and bolster their résumés, he said.

Gach said the group, which meets every Monday, is a break from schoolwork and gives members something to do during their free time.

The release of Apple's much-anticipated operating system "Leopard" was delayed until at least October. Despondent graphic design students and fans of emo music now must content themselves with the existing "Tiger" system and wonder what will happen when Apple runs out exciting animal names and releases its "Tabby" system.

Hit | Success of Open House

K-State once again was full of prospective students, alumni and members of the community hoping to get a look at the campus and take advantage of the free food and entertainment this weekend at the All-University Open House. Luckily, weather reports predicting winter weather advisories were wrong, and people enjoyed the event without bundling up.

Miss | Indiscreet prostitution

Busted Washington, D.C., madam Deborah Jeane Palfrey has decided if she's already headed to prison, she's might as well rat on her clients. It seems some professions mandate keeping your trap shut, and high-profile hooker ranks near the top. Besides, having watched C-SPAN, there are roughly zero people in Washington anyone cares to visualize naked.

Hit | Provost not pulling a Huggins

Despite naming him a finalist in its search for a new university president, West Virginia did not select K-State Provost M. Duane Nellis to be the face of the university. This would have been the second high-ranking K-State employee lured to coal country this month, after Huggi fled Manhattan for Morgantown, W. Va., April 5.

Miss | Excessive celeb coverage

You have to put considerable effort into not hearing about Anna Nicole Smith, or Don Imus, or Anna Nicole's kid, or what Don Imus said, or who Anna Nicole's baby's daddy is. Cable used to be enjoyable before the daily horse-skinning brought on by TV news. We'll throw a miss to Ted Turner for inventing the 24-hour news station and one extra for that nonsensical Landon Lecture he gave two years ago.

Spray or stomp?

Encounter with centipede proves that desperate times call for desperate measures

Like most, this story has an auspicious start. I went into the bathroom for my morning shower and had just taken off my glasses when I discovered The Centipede.

See, centipedes like dark, damp places, and the only such place in our bathroom was the bunched-up folds of the shower-curtain. When I shoved the showercurtain over to one side, a small brown fuzz zoomed along the floor toward the toilet stall. Having my glasses off, I couldn't really see the legs of the small brown fuzz.

House centipedes are mostly legs, so my glasses not only clicked those into sharpness but also made the bug look about five times bigger. Uh-oh.

Acting on a mental level somewhere between musclememory and sleep-walking, I somehow grabbed a plunger and plopped it down on top of the centipede, trapping it underneath and buying myself

At this point, you probably should know a few things about your average house centipede.

(No, I didn't run screaming from the bathroom to frantically ask the Internet about my problems. That happened the last time I encountered one of these beasts.)

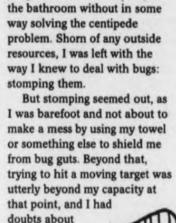

Anyway, house centipedes

were carried over to America by unnamed European explorers sometime during the 19th century. They like to eat other bugs, but when provoked, they can have a nasty bite.

The latter half worried me, especially since I read it on Wikipedia. You never know how those wacky Internet entomologists will try to play a joke on

So there we were, house centipede, plunger and me all stuck in that bathroom. And that Wikipedia page didn't tell me whether or not centipedes were super-strong or able to lift heavy weights or a million other things that could get them out from under that plunger.

One thing was sure: I couldn't jump into the shower or leave pressing down on the plunger while maintaining a seal and preventing its escape.

This was about the point that my internal monologue started to sound like a Monty Python

What else do we do to bugs? We spray them!

What do we have to spray them with here? Air freshener!

So my plan was set: lift up the plunger a crack and spray the air-freshener into it at short

It wasn't exactly the stuff we used on wasps as kids, but it still had chemicals with long names on the back, so I figured it would work just as well.

My tactic went as planned, with the exception of the air freshener not even having time to aerosolize, resulting in blobs of smell-good rather than a fine

The centipede was doused with the stuff, and even if contact wasn't enough, it probably would get hungry and try to munch down on the coating of Worries assuaged, I went on to take my shower. But I don't know the eating patterns of a plunger since then to see if my plot took effect.

So if a mutant centipede shows up in a few weeks and starts trashing the town, feel free to blame it on me.

THE POWER OF GREEN By Thomas L. Friedman THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE

One day, Iraq, our post-9/11 trauma and the divisiveness of the Bush years all will be behind us - and America will need, and want, to get its groove back.

We will need to find a way to reknit America at home, reconnect America abroad and restore America to its natural place in the global order - as the beacon of progress, hope and inspiration. I have an idea how. It's called "green."

In the world of ideas, to name something is to own it. If you can name an issue, you can own the issue

One thing that always struck me about the term "green" was the degree to which, for so many years, it was defined by its opponents - by the people who wanted to disparage it. And they defined it as "liberal," "tree-hugging," "sissy," "girlie-man," "unpatriotic," "vaguely French."

Well, I want to rename "green." I want to rename it geostrategic, geoeconomic, capitalistic and patriotic.

I want to do that because I think that living, working, designing, manufacturing and projecting America in a green way can be the basis of a new unifying political movement for the 21st century.

A redefined, broader and more muscular green ideology is not meant to trump the traditional Republican and Democratic agendas but rather to bridge them when it comes to addressing the three major issues facing every American today: jobs, temperature and ter-

LEGACY OF ASIAN LIBERATION By Kazuo Ogoura THE JAPAN TIMES ONLINE

Taiwanese politics appears to be boiling. Scandals involving political leaders or their relatives have heated the political waters.

Seen from the perspectives of democracy, freedom, human rights, the rule of law and justice - rather than from that of what effects the turmoil might have on Japan-Taiwan relations - it is not the political scandals themselves that are important but the way in which they are addressed; whether or not there is strict adherence to judicial proceedings; and how politicians take responsibility for their actions.

It is worth recalling that it took considerable time and countless trials and tribulations for democratic politics to become established in Taiwan.

If democratization is the process of liberation from tyranny, authoritarianism and the legacy of feudalism, then one of the greatest trials for the people of Taiwan must surely have been the events leading up to World War II.

As the Japanese empire strengthened its assimilation policies aimed at making Imperial subjects of the Taiwanese and other peoples under its rule, Taiwanese intellectuals faced a difficult di-

Some fell into line with the assimilation policies. Others resisted, while yet others sought refuge in poetry and music.

For this reason, though Japan's defeat in World War II may on the surface have signified liberation from colonial rule, it was not necessarily clear what people were being liberated from in the true sense of the word.

Pelosi flouts government hierarchy

I'd like to start with a quick lesson in U.S. government responsibility. For those who don't know, the main job of the Speaker of the House of Representatives is to run House meetings, and the Secretary of State acts as a diplomat to enforce the administration's foreign policy. That said, I'd like to send my congratulations to our new "Speaker of the State," Nancy Pelosi.

Speaker Pelosi, D-Calif., has decided she, not the White House, writes foreign policy and chooses with whom we open negotiations.

In her recent trip to Syria, she spoke of a message that "mirrors that of the president."

I find that interesting, since Syria is a known sponsor of both Hezbollah and Hamas, two organizations responsible for murdering Israelis and Americans. I can't imagine what we as a nation would have to talk about with that country. She apparently suggested, as well, that Israel was ready to talk peace. Yet Israeli prime minister Ehud Olmert immediately came out to deny these claims.

The question I have about this whole thing is, where are the tranand Syrian President Bashar Assad? There is no audio of the meeting that we see looped endlessly on TV. Pelosi claimed she said nothing to contradict the foreign policy of the president but offered no details. I would like to hear those meetings, especially after a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Tom Lantos, D-Calif., claimed there is a Democratic foreign policy different from the president's.

Claims of Pelosi's bad behavior are deflected by the left as being an indicator of the poverty of ideas to bring peace to the region under the current administration. If there is a poverty of ideas, then it certainly makes no sense for Pelosi to relay the president's message, which she hates.

It could be because that's not the message she took, and there was no message. The whole thing was a photo opportunity, and more importantly, an election opportunity. We know neither Syria nor Iran have any interest in opening dialogue with the United States or Israel. Rather, they would like to see us wiped off the map. But the media, and to an extent, the voters, love to hear how the merciful Democrats tried to keep diplomatic lines open while war-mongering Republicans only wanted to blow up their countries and take their oil. The Democrats will be glad to go talk to the Syrian "president," and they'll talk to Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad. They'll talk to whomever. They will not appear on Fox, and they will not go speak to the president after he has sent them an invitation. It's time for the "Speaker of the State" to abandon her imaginary position. Our Speaker of the House should stick to running House sessions instead of hustling the Democratic agenda to our enemies.

Small Kansas towns searching for other ways to get revenue

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many of America's small towns face the loss of revenue because of lack of largescale attractions.

Kansas' towns are no different. Tourists usually do not look to the southeast corner of the state as a getaway for a relaxing vacation, and when they decide to visit other areas, they take their money with them.

However, small-town residents are taking steps to make their towns more attractive to outsiders.

Craig Hull, director of Crawford County Conventions and Visitors Bureau, said sponsoring sporting events is one way to bring more money for the southeastern Kansas county. He said tourism in Kansas is only the No. 4 industry, whereas tourism is the No. 1 industry in Missouri, where his career began.

"We have a stigma that there is nothing to do in Kansas, and we are having a hard time addressing that issue," Hull said. "We are trying to establish a different kind of market in Crawford County."

Hull said on average, an athlete visiting a city for a sporting event will bring in anywhere from $85 to $149 per day.

"We see that and try to make our city appealing to event organizers, but being in southeastern Kansas, organizers are going to want to go to the Topekas, Wichitas and Manhattans to hold their events," Hull said.

Kirsten Stotts, director of tourism for Coffeyville, points to the town's history with the Dalton Gang as its main drawing point.

"On October 5, 1862, the Dalton Gang tried to rob two of our banks at the same time," Stotts said.

"After seeing this, many people from the town armed themselves and killed four of the five members of the gang. "We now have Dalton Defenders Days to pay tribute to those who died protecting the town."

The two-day event, which draws about 3,000 people every year, also includes a re-enactment of the standoff between the residents and the Dalton Gang.

The city used to hire professional actors to perform the re-enactment every year, but two years ago, the residents began to participate. New events at this year's

High school sports are a popular activity in Arkansas City, Swanson said.

"I played sports all through high school," Swanson said. "Sometimes we would go fishing, too, and that was on private land, owned by people we knew."

est with ourselves, we're all fascinated by the dark side of sports. But if we're not careful, we start to think sports are all about angry fans, selfish coaches, corrupt programs and pampered players. But, when you take the time to look past all the dirt, you find something beautiful and heartbreaking. These stories remind us that at the end of the day, it's just a game.

We knew that all along, of course. But sometimes we all need a little reminder.

Football brought Alesana Alesana to the United States in 2003. He spent the first 23 years of his life in Western Samoa, where the most popular sport is rugby. But when you stand 6-foot-6 and weigh 295 pounds, it's hard to convince people to play rugby with you.

"Rugby is a lot more violent than football," he said. "I got a lot of broken bones from it."

So Alesana enrolled at the City College of San Francisco on a football scholarship, greyshirting his first year while he learned the

The unusual spring weather has had an effect not only on students' wardrobe options, but also on the K-State baseball team's schedule.

Because of weather, the baseball games in Stillwater, Okla., against Oklahoma State were moved back a day and then postponed until Sunday, forcing the teams to play a doubleheader Sunday afternoon.

The Wildcats lost the first game 5-3. They were down 2-0 in the fifth when sophomore Byron Wiley knocked in K-State's first run. Two batters later he was driven in by a sacrifice bunt by senior Eli Rumler to tie the game. The Cowboys scored two runs in the bottom of the sixth to go up 4-2, then added another run in the eighth to lead by three.

K-State junior pitcher Brad Hutt started the game and allowed eight hits and four runs - only three earned - in six innings. In his last outing he also pitched six innings, but did not give up any runs.

Sophomore reliever Justin Murray came in and pitched two innings, while giving up only one run off of Since becoming the head coach, the Wildcat men's and women's cross country, indoor and outdoor track and field programs have earned 126 All-America certificates and 94 individual conference championships.

The Wildcat track mentor has overseen two Big 12 Conference outdoor women's track titles and has earned the following personal honors during his time in Manhattan: the 2001 National Coach of the Year by the U.S. Track and Field and Cross Country Coaches Association, five NCAA Midwest Region Coach of the Year honors and in 2005 was given the United States Women's Track and Field College Coaches Award for Service. His latest international assignment was as an assistant for Team USA at the 2005 World Outdoor Championships.

Rovelto will work under Team USA head coach and current head coach at Texas A&M, Pat Henry. Rounding out Henry's staff for the championships are: Mike Holloway in the sprints/hurdles (head coach - Florida), Ron Warhurst in the distance events (head coach – Michigan) and Robert Weir in the throws (head coach - Stanford) University of Miami head coach Amy Deem will guide the women's team. The women's staff assistant coaches are Rita Somerlot in the jumps/combined events, Juli Henner in the distance events (assistant coach, George Mason), Danny Williams in the sprints/hurdles (assistant coach, Cal Poly) and John Frazier in the throws (assistant coach, Tennessee).

At the most recent World Outdoor Championships in 2005 in Helsinki, Finland, Team USA set an all-time record in winning 14 gold medals.

Team USA also won eight silver medals and three bronze medals for 25 medals overall, equaling its second-best medal tally in World Outdoor Championships history (1993 - Stuttgart), and finishing one shy of the all-time record of 26 at the 1991 World Championships.

This weekend, the K-State track teams are competing at the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla., and at the UTEP Invitational in El Paso, Texas.

Discovering the 14ers

K-State researcher says Colorado's mountains above 14,000 feet becoming more popular

By Patrick Werick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 14ers, Colorado's 54 mountains that exceed 14,000 feet above sea level, culturally influence what Americans think is important, said a K-State geographer.

"With increased technology and better access, the uprising in mountain recreation and extreme sports puts more renewed emphasis on the 14ers, and this influences what people see as important," said Kevin Blake, an associate professor of geography at K-State.

Blake is working on a book intended to show how people and cities use the 14ers as a form of place identity.

The book will focus on three points: the evolving idea of the 14ers as a group rather than individual mountains, the environmental repercussions of the increased number of hikers on the mountains, and the role the 14ers play in place identity for local communities.

"Mountains can evolve, not only in a physical way, but also in a cultural way, and as of now, we do not have a book about the culture of the 14ers," Blake said.

on interviews with land managers, climbers, forest rangers, tourists and leaders of non-profit organizations related to the 14ers in Colo-

Blake also has spent years participating and observing, hiking with other climbers and documenting geographical features in Colorado.

The popularity of the 14ers continues to climb and, along with other American landscapes, sometimes are compared to the cathedrals of Europe, according to Blake's research. He said the mountains are one of the most popular attractions in the country.

"Colorado shines compared to all other places due Blake's research is based to the number of peaks above 14,000 feet in a relatively small geographical area," he said.

Many American Indians consider entire landscapes, especially mountains, to be sacred places. It appears these mountains are becoming more important to many other Americans as well, Blake said.

"The idea is that the 14er is centered more around an individual seeing it as a sacred place," Blake said. "In that way, it becomes their connection to the world."

The Colorado mountains increasingly are seen in advertisements, magazines and even TV commercials.

During his research, Blake found that people see them as a distinct group instead of individual mountains, which contributes to their place identity.

The mountains are popular because they symbolize the lofty ideals of proper land management.

Blake said he enjoys the work he does and never really sees it as a job.

"I'm really writing this book as an active scholarship to give the public something they will simply enjoy," he said. "Being able to read and write about (the mountains) is as satisfying as climbing them."

Blake is the recipient of several awards in his field, including the William L. Stamey Award for Excellence in Teaching from K-State's College of Arts and Sciences.

He teaches several graduate and undergraduate courses at K-State and is the creator and teacher of the undergraduate course "Geography of the American West."

Collectibles show offers various sports, pop culture memorabilia

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether young or simply young at heart, the Manhattan Sports Card, Comics and Collectibles show that took place at Manhattan Town Center Saturday and Sunday had something to offer for every fan.

The show featured 35 different vendors from Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa. Most dealt in sports cards and other sports memorabilia, but some also traded toys, clothing

"I've been doing these shows for 25 years now," said Tim Belk, owner of Mo-Ark Sports Card and Collectible Show. "I've been coming to Manhattan twice a year now for the past 14 years."

During the two-day event, many people stopped by the show to purchase, sell and trade collectibles.

"It's hard to say, but we had at least 200 to 300 people who came specifically for the show," Belk said. "Since the show is in a mall, we get a lot of people who come for different reasons but then end up browsing."

Manhattan resident Jeff Proctor said he was looking around while his wife was

"I probably have 3,000 cards sitting at home that I collected as a kid, but I haven't bought any in a long time," Proctor said. "Seeing all of these cards reminds me of why I enjoyed collecting so much."

Belk said the items sold vary from show to show, as different vendors come to each show, making it difficult to predict which items will be popular.

"It's hard to tell what's selling well because there are so many people who come for different reasons," Belk said. Right now, everyone seems to be after stuff with Alex Gordon (of the Kansas City Royals) and NASCAR."

Belk said Manhattan is a good town at which to have the show because of the variety of people living here.

"There are a lot of people here from different places, which means a lot of people like different sports teams, Belk said. "Denver, Dallas and Kansas City football collectibles are usually the strongest sellers in Manhattan, but people will buy collectibles from whoever is the hottest sports team at the time."

Vendors Doug and Ryan Peters from Topeka own R&D Sports Collectibles. The fatherson team has been taking part in the Mo-Ark show for more than nine years.

"Basically we do this for fun and also to make a little extra money on the side." Ryan said. "We probably do about 20 shows a year between Topeka, Manhattan and Kansas City."

"Business has been good, especially for our McFarland (football) Action Player figurines and our NASCAR models," Doug said. "There really aren't any dealers of NASCAR memorabilia in the Manhattan area, so when we come to town the collectors always make it knew what the doctors said. But when he looked at Bree, he saw a heart that was bigger and stronger than anyone's.

"She was a big motivation to me," he said.

So last year, Alesana knelt down beside Bree's hospital bed and proposed, with her parents looking on.

"It was a sad but happy moment," said Bree's brother Meaalii. "With him and Bree, it was a relationship that was bound to be forever."

Meanwhile, Alesana's football career was blossoming. He anchored the offensive line for the Rams, one of the most successful junior college offenses in the nation.

Several Division I universities began courting Alesana, including K-State. Coach Ron Prince said he was convinced Alesana was the best pass blocker in the country.

So Alesana accepted the scholarship to K-State, even though it meant leaving Bree behind. She knew it was a great opportunity, and deep down she wanted him to go.

In December, just before Alesana left for K-State, Bree received a heart transplant. She recovered quickly, and friends and family thought she finally had beaten her sickness. It wasn't long before she was back at work, doing all the things she had done before the transplant.

"When she got out of the hospital, she was supposed to go home and rest," Luv said. "She came straight here to get her work together."

It wasn't easy for Bree and Alesana to be apart, but they made do, talking on the phone whenever they could. Bree's friends said she was as happy and healthy as she'd ever been.

"Sometimes we'd come in when she was talking on the phone with Alesana," Luv said. "We'd start making jokes with her, saying 'Oh, Alesana, he's my boyfriend! She'd just laugh and pass the phone around so everyone could say hello."

With Bree's health quickly improving, she and Alesana began planning their wedding. Bree's brother Meaalii, a musician, started writing songs for the ceremony.

When Alesana visited Bree during spring break, nothing had changed. Her smile, her compassion, her warrior spirit - it was all there.

On April 4, just two weeks after he visited Bree in San Francisco, Alesana's phone rang. He heard Meaalii's familiar voice on the other end.

Bree was gone.

"Everything was good," Alesana said. "She just had an appointment a couple weeks ago. I guess something happened, and her heart failed. It was unexpected."

You see, sometimes the body rejects a new heart, the very thing that keeps it alive. No one knows why.

When Meaalii called Alesana to break the news, he tried to explain that no one saw it coming, that there was no way Alesana could have found out in time to say good-bye. But at that moment, words were meaningless. There was a moment of silence between us, and I really knew what was going on," Meaalii said. "I couldn't say anything. It was in God's Alesana is on his way back to San Francisco to attend Bree's funeral and memorial service.

He will not play in Saturday's spring game.

For Meaalii and the rest of Bree's family, waiting for Alesana to return is the hardest part. He is part of the family, after all, even if he and Bree never got their wedding.

When Alesana arrives, they will all grieve together. It will be a sad but happy moment.

On Bree's MySpace.com profile, there's an image of a pristine beach with the words "Alesana Loves Galoma" written in the sand. Then a wave crashes on the shore, an explosion of frothy surf, and the words are gone.

That's the nature of life, in a

One moment it's here, the next it's gone.

"The doctors gave her a time frame," Meaalii said of his sister. "They told us that Bree probably won't live to see 16. Bree would have been 29 in July. A person can't tell when you're going to leave. We're actually blessed for the time she gave us."

More viewers watching TV shows released on DVD

By Kendra Stiles KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seven years ago, HBO released the first seasons of hit shows "Sex and the City" and "The Sopranos" on DVD.

Sitcoms like "Friends" and "Seinfeld" quickly followed suit, and since then, a TV-on-DVD craze has taken over the pop-culture world.

Manhattan, video stores like Blockbuster Video, Dillon's video, Hasting's Books, Music and Video and the Digital Shelf offer shows on DVD to buy or rent.

Charissa Beer, employee at Digital Shelf, said TV shows on DVD are one of the most sought-after items in the store.

"TV shows are probably where the owner makes the most profit," she said. "People are always getting into shows and coming in to rent them." Beer said Digital Shelf carries almost any show imaginable, from HBO's "Rome" to "CSI" and "Deadwood," some of the most popular rentals.

'We have absolutely anything from the old classics like 'Beverly Hillbillies' and 'Dukes of Hazzard' to any of the current hits like 'Lost' or 'Grey's Anatomy," she said. "And if we don't have it, we'll get a hold of it so you can come in and rent it."

Beer said she thinks TV shows on DVD are successful because a certain amount of convenience comes with watching shows at one's own leisure.

"A lot of shows people either can't get a hold of or they don't have the time to watch when they're on, so they come here," she said. "It's very convenient to be able to watch at your own pace whenever you want."

Digital Shelf offers entire seasons of some shows all in one package, but others are offered only one or two discs at a time, depending on the number of discs in the season, Beer said. Customers can rent new releases for three days, and other rentals are for five days and four

Rachel Kroh, junior in elementary education, said she owns seven seasons of "Friends," all three seasons of "One Tree Hill" and a season of "The Office."

"'Friends' is classic and hilarious," she said. "Having it on DVD is great because you get to watch it whenever you want and pick whatever episode you want."

Christina Keys, junior in personal financial planning, said she owns two seasons of "Gilmore Girls," two seasons of "24," and all three seasons of "Grey's Anatomy" because she prefers owning the sets to watching on television.

"You don't have to watch commercials, and you don't have to wait for the next episode," she said. "It's nice to be able to watch it all at once. It's more convenient."

Kroh and Keys agreed it is easy to get addicted to watching complete seasons.

"My favorite is 'Grey's Anatomy," Keys said. "It sounds stupid, but you'll get to the point where you just can't wait to see the next episode. I've even got my parents and my sister all watching it now."

Kroh said she also became hooked on a series.

"I watched all three seasons of 'One Tree Hill' in about two months because I couldn't stop watching it, even though I already knew what was going to happen," she said. "My husband and I were afraid to rent 'Lost' because we didn't want to get addicted to it."

Lyndsey Born | COLLEGIAN

Meghan McFee, freshman in park management and conservation, looks at a TV series on DVD at the Digital Shelf on Sunday afternoon.

Keys said watching shows on DVD does not affect her other TV-watching habits for the most part.

"When I first bought 'Grey's,' I'd watch it all to get caught up with the current season, and I didn't really watch any TV." she said. "I don't watch a whole lot of TV anyway, but after I'd get caught up, I'd go back to watching any shows I did normally watch."

'Mythbusters' hosts discuss show topics

By Austin Apple KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The All-University Open House began Friday evening with the "Mythbusters" event in McCain Auditori-

Grant Imahara and Kari Byron, co-hosts of the Discovery Channel's "Mythbusters," a show that challenges myths and urban legends, answered questions about the show Friday night. McCain was sold out for the event.

Byron got her start on the show when producers made a 3-D image of her backside for the "vacuum toilet"

"This was the myth where a large woman was on a plane and got stuck to the toilet when she flushed while still on it," she said.

The circumstances through which Imahara joined the show were a bit different, Byron said.

"Grant had the job from day one," she said.

He knew the show's other hosts. Imahara got a call from Jamie Hyneman, a "Mythbusters" co-host, when he was working on "Van Helsing" with Industrial Light and Magic. Hyneman asked Imahara if he wanted to join the build team, but he stayed at ILM because he wanted to fulfill his childhood dream and work on the third "Star Wars" film.

"One year later, after finishing work on 'Star Wars' and 'XXX: State of the Union,' I joined the 'Mythbusters' build team," Imahara said.

Michael Wesch, professor of anthropology, introduced Imahara and "I was painfully shy, and this I would have never imagined," said Byron, who has an art degree.

Imahara has an electrical engineering degree from the University of Southern California. Some of Imahara's film credits include "Jurassic Park", "Star Wars: Episode 1 - The Phantom Menace," "Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines," "A.I.: Artificial Intelligence" and "The Matrix Reloaded." Imahara also operated R2-D2 and developed a special circuit for the Energizer Bunny's arms and ears to move at a constant rate.

Wesch asked the pair about their insurance, because some experiments they conduct on the show are danger-

"We knew we had the right insurance company when we found out that they also insured the show 'Jackass," Imahara said.

Imahara said he believes the popularity of the show is growing, because the sizes of the audiences at their speaking engagements have in-

Wesch asked if there were experiments from the show that did not make it to the small screen.

"Some myths do not make it because they do not want kids to kill themselves doing what we do," Byron said, "There are a few episodes that did not make it because of corporate sponsorship."

One clip they showed was cut because a host was attempting to light his flatulence on fire. The next clip featured the team trying to determine whether girls flatulate. A microphone was put in Byron's blouse. Nothing happened all day until the very end when she finally made a noise. On stage, Byron had her head in her general public, they said. Ideas can be submitted on the show's Web site.

After questions from Wesch, the pair opened the floor to anyone who wanted to ask questions, and audience members of all ages had questions.

"I love to see the mix of ages from young children up to people in their '70s and '80s, and I think that reflects the show's demographic," Imahara said, "One of the best compliments we can have is people feel comfortable enough to watch the show with their children and that is something they can share."

Daniel Moeder, freshman in physics, said he thought the hosts played off the fact that most people at the event were nerds.

"I thought the event was pretty funny," he said.

One audience member asked Byron if she would go to his prom. She declined, to the laughter of the audience members.

Chris Rock paternity suit to be refiled in New York

STATESBORO, Ga. - A woman who claims Chris Rock is the father of her child is withdrawing a lawsuit filed last month in Georgia and will refile it in New York, according to a published report.

Kali Bowyer claims the 42-year-old actor-cornedian is the father of a child she had 13 years ago. The lawsuit filed in Bulloch County asked for child support, medical coverage and attorney Bowyer told the Statesboro Herald on Thursday she decided to refile the lawsuit in New York after consulting with her attorney.

She could not immediately be reached by The Associated Press for comment Friday.

Bowyer claims she and Rock "were friends and we spent time together."

Rock and his wife, Malaak, have been married for 10 years. They have two young children and live in the New York City borough of Brooklyn.

Seaton Hall Concert Series draws crowd, raises $300

By Eric Brown KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Normal traffic in Seaton Hall on Saturday evenings usually consists of architecture students putting in extra hours on projects.But that wasn't the case this weekend.

Saturday night, Pierce Commons was the site of the debut for the Seaton Hall Concert Series, a twoand-a-half hour concert sponsored by K-State's American Institute of Architecture Students.

"This was really a way for our group to open its doors a little more to the rest of the campus," said Michael Friebele, senior in architecture and member of AIAS. "And this was also another way to provide an outlet for some of the local music talent that we have.'

The concert's 100-plus attendees paid a $3 cover charge at the door to catch performances by D.J. Pure, McCoy, Of The Flame-Hand Robot and Shhh. All profits from Saturday night's show will go to AIAS.

Friebele said the concert raised an estimated $300.

"With what we've made here, we plan to use that to continue building this series," Friebele said. "At a certain point, we would like to bring in more prominent speakers or even get independent bands from outside the area.'

But though the group plans to build on the success of the concert series' debut, many audience members said they were more than pleased with Saturday night's ef-

"I really loved the setup of the show, the bands were good and it seemed to be very well organized and had a good flow," said Rachel Bain, sophomore in architectural engineering. "If they do this again, I definitely plan on attending."

The bands that performed said they agreed that the show was a success.

"This was a great way for our band to get started," said Jeremy Chugg, junior in English and lead singer and guitarist for McCoy, who performed their first-ever live gig. "Everything about the concert seemed great. And by playing in a venue like Seaton Hall and performing for the architecture students, I think this show exposed us to an audience we wouldn't normally get."

No official plans are set for the next Seaton Hall Concert Series event, but Friebele already has ideas brewing.

"I'd expect the next concert in September sometime," he said. "There's a couple of bigger bands out east that we would like to bring in, and then maybe also have some local bands do the opening acts.

"I've also thought of having our group maybe just go out and ask students what they want to see and then work from there. Either way, I think this series could turn into something pretty big, and I would like to see that."

1943: Effects of LSD discovered

In Basel, Switzerland, Albert Hoffman, a Swiss chemist, accidentally consumed LSD-25, a synthetic drug he had created in 1938 After taking the drug, formally known a lysergic acid diethylamide, Dr. Hoffman had unusual sensa tions and hallucinations Widespread use of the so-called "mind-expand-ing" drug did not begin until the 1960s, when Albert M. Hubbard, Timothy Leary and Ken Kesey publicly expounded on the benefits of using LSD as a recreational drug. The manufacture, sale, possession, and use of LSD, known to cause negative reactions in some of those who take it, were made illegal in the ted States in 1965.

Shooting kills 33 at VA Tech

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A one-man shooting spree rocked the Virginia Tech campus early Monday morning, killing 33 people and injuring 29, according to the Associated Press.

The gunman, whose name had not been released at press time, began his spree at about 7 a.m. in West Ambler Johnston co-ed residence hall. Two hours later, the rampage continued in the campus engineering building, Norris Hall, according to the AP.

Thirty-one people were killed in the hall, including the gunman. The police engaged in a one-hour shootout with the killer, who eventually took his own life.

The first murders, which occurred in the residence hall, originally were thought to be isolated incidents. Investigators believed the shooter left campus and would not return to the area, university president Charles Steger said in a press conference.

Police still are investigating whether the shootings are related, and have not ruled out the possibility of a second shooter.

During the press conference, Steger expressed sadness and spoke of the steps the university was taking to control the situation.

'The university is shocked and indeed horrified that this would befall us," Steger said. "I want to extend my deepest and most sincere and profound sympathy to the families of these victims, which include our students."

Steger said the victims were being identified as quickly as possible. He also said the campus will be open Tuesday, but all classes will be

The gunman carried no form of identification. His motives are unclear at this time, and it also is unclear whether he had ties to any terrorist groups, according to the AP.

Justin Asbury, Emporia, Kan., is a third-year medical student at Virginia Tech who said he was not on campus when the shootings oc-

"I'm actually out on location (for medical school)," Asbury said. "I wasn't even in the city."

Asbury's fiancée, however, was about a half mile away from campus, near the hospital, he said, and she called him at about 9:40 a.m. when the university went on lock-

"She did tell me that at first they had reported just the one shooting, and the shooter was loose still, and that was more like 9:30," he said. "It was 15-20 minutes after that that everything went on lockdown. They wouldn't let anyone leave anywhere, any establishments or anything like that.

"The sirens started going - they started getting people down there. Sirens were going for a couple hours straight. She said it was crazy."

Asbury said for the most part, the Virginia Tech community is a secure place.

The process to donate blood usually takes about an hour, depending on the time of day. Hoffman said it could be longer during the lunch hour.

When students go in to donate, they are asked a series of questions about drug use, sexual history and previous travel abroad as a preliminary screening. After answering those questions, students will Once their iron levels are checked, students may donate blood. The transfer itself takes between six and 25 minutes.

Editor's note: This is a firstperson account from one K-State student whose life was saved as a result of receiving a transfusion of donated blood.

almost every joint in my body - some twice. I was used to being hurt, but it was always temporary. Never could I have imagined an injury that would last longer than a couple weeks, or at most, a couple of months. Imagine my shock when I received an injury requiring 16 units of blood to save my life.

For the life of me, I can't recall if the pain was really that bad. It was more discomfort an actual pain. Sometimes, I would just feel sick after I ate, or I would have bad stomach cramps. I thought I could have lived with it, but I told my parents about it, and they thought we should consult a doctor.

Medical professionals ran tests, and my doctor concluded my gallbladder was the source of the problem. He said it wasn't functioning correctly and should be removed.

We saw a surgeon and scheduled the surgery. It was supposed to be a simple surgery called a laparoscopy, requiring just four small incisions in the abdomen rather than a fiveto seven-inch incision made during

The pain started in spring 2003. open gallbladder surgery. Patients usually have minimal post-operative pain and can go home within one day of the procedure, I was told. So, I thought, "Why not?"

> The surgery was scheduled at Abilene Memorial Hospital for July 21, two days after my 18th birth-

> I wasn't worried about the surgery; it was a routine procedure doctors performed every day. What could go wrong with a simple laparoscopy? Now that question rings ironically inside my head.

> I woke up in the intensive care

"Cynthia, you are in Salina Regional Hospital. There were complications with your surgery. Cynthia, please try to stop moving."

A nurse was talking to me, but I was not listening. I tried to sit up, and pain engulfed my body. It felt like someone had inserted a circular saw into my body. Every time I moved, it was like the saw turned on and cut through my insides. My mom took my hand. She told me that something had gone wrong with my surgery.

While making one of the incisions, my surgeon had cut into my left iliac artery, causing extensive internal bleeding. I had a repair surgery a day later, and my new doctors put a graft in my severed artery to stop the internal bleeding. They also removed my gallbladder, which the original doctor had not

Campus leaders' wives work to increase diversity at K-State

By Whitney Hodgin KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two women were honored last Thursday for their continuing efforts to "internationalize" K-State.

Sharon Reagan and Ruth Ann Wefald, founders and cochairs of the Friends of International Programs, have been dedicated to expanding the efforts of K-State's International Student Center out of a mutual belief in the benefits of diversity.

Both Reagan and Wefald have been consistent in their efforts to make the diversification of K-State easy and worthwhile for those involved.

"We're bringing together students from the campus and people in the community to learn more about international perspectives," Wefald said. "We founded Friends so that our students could study with and learn from international students and visa-versa."

Friends of International Programs is a two-year-old organization in which volunteers provide temporary housing for international visitors to help them feel comfortable while studying abroad. Friends also raises money to provide scholarships for K-State students wishing to study in another country, as well as international students who come to study at K-State.

The group took advantage of International Week by hosting a program called Understanding Islam, producing an international fashion show and inviting a Buddhist priest to speak at Hale Library.

"I think it's very important for K-State students to have an international experience and get the opportunity to study abroad," Reagan said. "It opens up a lot of doors for them in the future. You learn a lot about yourself when you're in an international setting."

Reagan and Wefald promoted education, social awareness and cultural diversity even before they moved to Manhattan, a town they admit still falls short of diversity goals.

Since moving to Manhattan in 1986 with her husband, Jon, after he became K-State's 12th president, Ruth Ann Wefald's efforts with fundraising, student recruitment and community building have been recognized by several institutions, including K-State's leadership program.

In 2005, Wefald received the Michael C. Holden Outstanding Leadership Award and has since raised money for a boathouse for the women's rowing team, four studios for the dance program and raised donations for Hale Library.

She also helped collect $6 million in donations to add an additional wing to the Beach Museum of Art.

"I remember going to the International Student Center with her last August and greeting each student individually," said Ken Holland, assistant provost for international studies at K-State. "She told them personally how she wanted them to have a good time."

Reagan, who is retired from a career in speech therapy, is currently a Friend of Hale Library and the Beach Museum. She's also a World Friendship Officer — a program that was established to help international women living in Manhattan learn English and make new friends and share cultures with U.S. women.

Her husband Charles is chair of K-State's Landon Lecture series. Together, they have been closely involved in recruiting international students, most of whom are from Costa Rica. "There has been a steady flow of students from Costa Rica because of the Reagans," Holland said. "They always invite them into their home and make sure to form relationships with their parents."

Holland said Reagan and Wefald work together so well because they have a common passion for students and experiencing other cultures.

"The one factor that really stands out for me is how much they love students," he said. "They want students to have the best possible time at Edesias opened April 4 after being delayed more than a week, co-owner Amy Nelson said.

"We had construction delays and a few other odds and ends," Nelson said. "Things came up that pushed everything back."

The bakery, which also offers a wide range of coffees, sodas and panini sandwiches, has enjoyed decent sales despite the late opening, she

"Business has been good," Nelson said. "We have a lunch rush with lots of people, but we don't have as much morning business as Aggieville gets. "On Saturdays, a lot of people come in to buy pastries. It's been a learning experience we're figuring out what people are looking for."

The biggest problem so far, she said, has been determining a menu and incorporating everyone's ideas.

"Everyone has a different idea of what a bakery is," Nelson said. "The definition is a wide-open canvas, and we've had to determine the products and size them up on the ideals of a bakery. We're slowly working all of the ideas into the menu."

Nelson owns the bakery with her sister, Jennifer Grieshaber, and also works closely with her husband, Eli, one of the baristas at the bakery.

Eli, who previously worked at Bluestem Bistro, said he loves working with the drinks. "I like coffee," he said. "I like making coffee. It might be one of my favorite things in the world. It's like chemistry. When you're working with food, you can have all sorts of different mixtures."

Eli, who also works for the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery one floor above the restaurant, said working for his significant other is not awkward for him.

"It's really nice, actually," bakery."

Embarrassing actuality

Outspoken politician proves not true in deed to his environmental word

After selling millions of DVDs, winning an Academy Award for best documentary and enlightening millions of Americans as to the effects of global warming, one might think Al Gore is a true comrade to the eco-friendly, right? Think again.

the planet, his actions do not match his words.

KELLY

Al Gore flies in private jets to lecture us mere mortals about the effects of global warming. He and his wife, Tipper, split time between two properties: a 10,000-square-foot, 20-room, eight-bathroom home in Nashville, Tenn., and a 4,000-squarefoot home in Arlington, Va. He also owns a family farm in Carthage,

But Gore rests assured that he is still Mother Earth's favorite greenie, simply because he purchases "carbon credits."

Gore has made it his mission to "offset" all his harmful carbon emissions by purchasing credits that give money to a charity working to produce alternative energy sources.

This sounds eerily similar to something I remember learning about in my high school days: rich people paying to remove their personal guilt of living a lavish, unnecessary lifestyle.

This entire process reminds me why Martin Luther nailed his 95 theses to the door of Castle Church in Wittenberg, Germany. The Catholic Church was selling indulgences to alleviate the wealthy from the consequences of sin.

Global warming has become the new religion, carbon emission the new sin, and carbon credits the new indulgences. Unfortunately, just as in the Middle Ages, money does not buy forgiveness, and buying carbon credits does not negate the effects of global warming.

An independent agency, the Tennessee Center for Policy Research, recently analyzed Gore's energy bills. It found that Gore used 221,000 kilowatt hours - more than 20 times the national average of 10,656. Last August alone, Gore's homes used 22,619 kWh. Also, since the release of his Oscar-winning documentary, his energy consumption increased from 16,200 kWh per month in 2005 to 18,400 kWh per month in 2006.

But Gore offset his energy by purchasing carbon credits, so the untold harm and warming of the atmosphere caused by his wasteful living should be forgiven

Gore bought these credits from one of his close personal friends: himself. Gore buys his carbon credits from Generation Investment Management, of which he is the chairman. He draws income from the firm, and will make a profit if its investments flourish.

In a nutshell, he buys these credits through a transaction with himself, a transaction which boosts his own investment and returns a profit - to himself.

That is not called buying carbon offsets; it is called buying stock.

More importantly, purchasing these credits doesn't eliminate pollution, but instead puts the burden on some of the world's poorest people.

For example, GreenSeat, a Dutch carbon-trading outfit, purchases offsets from a foundation that plants trees in Uganda's Mount Elgon National Park to soak up carbon. Unfortunately, expanding the park encroaches on land traditionally used by local farmers. The New York Times reported that "villagers living along the boundary of the park have been beaten and shot at, and their livestock has been confiscated by armed park rangers."

And yet, Gore and other supposed environmentalists continue to pollute with no remorse. My suggestion - they should do the little things we, the hoi polloi, have been asked to do: recycle, use fluorescent lights, use solar and wind power if available and ground the private jet.

Luckily, there are some celebrities who have committed themselves to personally making a difference in the fight against greenhouse gases.

One such celebrity recently built a house for his family that has 25,000 gallons of rainwater storage, gray water collection from sinks and showers for irrigation, passive solar, geothermal heating and cooling.

The architect, David Heyman, said the 4,000-square-foot house was "by marketplace standards. startlingly small," compared to clients of similar wealth, who "are building 16 - 20,000 square foot homes." Also, to increase thermal mass, the walls contain discards of a local stone called Leuders limestone, which is quarried in the area.

Since the stone has a mix of colors on the top and bottom and a cream-colored center that is more lucrative, the tops and bottoms usually are discarded. This home represents a real way celebrities can make a difference - not by working the market, but by lessening their own ecological effect on the earth.

The house in question? The Crawford Winter White House of President George W. Bush.

TO THE POINT | An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Reason, level-headedness of Virginia Tech student journalists during tragedy admirable

"Using e-mail (as a warning system) was probably inappropriate.

I think something more immediate would probably be the best way."

When vagrant horrors like the mass murders at Virginia Tech are thrust into our awareness, a momentary dislocation of logic is understandable. But though difficult, we cannot let the current of pure emotion drive our response.

Even in the burgeoning moments of the tragedy, varying news sources jockeyed for position with competing numbers, claims, fourth-hand information, and grim reminders of previous terrors.

While news agencies reasonably are motivated to produce information as quickly as it is acquired, the frantic pace and emotional packaging do little to move forward logical dialogue and understanding of these events. We don't want these events to reoccur, but hasty policy and legislation passed under emotional duress is not the solution.

Advancing these issues in a logical and reasonable manner is the only way these complex problems will be solved. Introspection is needed, not glitz and music yanked from a Tom Clancy spy thriller.

In this aspect, the Collegian would like to praise the staff of Virginia Tech's student newspaper, The Collegiate Times, for exemplary and level-headed journalism throughout the tragedy.

Logic and reason must be used to illuminate how students often are divorced from the world around them and its necessities.

That catastrophe can strike a university campus, bringing with it death and misery, sheds an eerie light on the current campus blood drive.

The Wildcat community mourns for the victims of Monday's tragedy, and we hope an injured nation will give itself time to heal so we can begin asking hard questions, and answering them sensibly.

Duke case just as unfair as Imus jibe

The current situation in America seems to be "white guy insults a women's basketball team and loses his?

On the other hand, a black stripper - whose name was released by thesmokinggun.com as Crystal Gail Mangum - falsely accuses three white

The insult from the white guy, however, is treated as the more damaging

Why was the announcement of the Duke lacrosse players' innocence buried in the headlines? It was partly because of race-baiting blacks and guilt-feeling whites who said no matter what happened, those boys must be " guilty.

North Carolina attorney general Roy Cooper was clear in his language when he announced all charges were going to be dropped. He said the Dukelacrosse players were "innocent."

Even with this announcement, many people still wish to condemn these men. In their minds, the lacrosse players have to be guilty, even though the evidence proved their innocence.

When the players were charged, attacks came from across the board.

Even a former Collegian writer, Megan Green, attacked the Duke la- " crosse players in her column "Athletes" shouldn't receive special treatment."

"These players finally are having to own up to their actions, and they shouldn't get any leniency," Green

No one was demanding leniency for those players. In fact, if a crime occurred, justice should be served.

Many groups like the New Black Panther Party believed these men should be put on trial even if there was no evidence against them. They condemned the men as rapists before all evidence was heard.

Even after the evidence proved their innocence, Malik Shabazz, head of the New Black Panther Party, said he still believed the men are guilty, and claimed the accuser is still a victim.

"I will not apologize, and I will not apologize in my defense of black women who have been raped and abused by white men," Shabazz said. "Over 1,600,000 black women have been sexually assaulted and raped by white men since we were brought here on slave ships, and none of them have been prosecuted."

Shabazz is the same man who claimed Jewish people in New York knew about the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks before they happened.

'If 3,000 people perished in the World Trade Center attacks and the Jewish population is 10 percent, you show me records of 300 Jewish people : dying in the World Trade Center," Shabazz said. "We're daring anyone to dispute its truth. They got their people

SKELETON OF MAMMOTH AUCTIONS FOR $421,200, BREAKS WORLD RECORD

PARIS – If you were looking for the skeleton of a prehistoric mammoth, Monday was your day to buy. Christie's auction house sold one for $421,200 – a world record.

The unidentified buyer was a European who collects contemporary art and 19th century furniture, Christie's spokeswoman Capucine Milliot said.

The mammoth sale was one of a dozen world records set during Monday's auction of paleontological curiosities that brought in a total of more than $1.53 million, Christie's said.

Medicaid rebate cuts make contraceptives more expensive

By Christina Hansen KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Medicaid cuts aimed at reducing the national deficit have doubled – even tripled – birth control prices at many university health centers across the country.

The U.S. House of Representatives narrowly passed the Deficit Reduction Bill in 2005 with a 217-215 vote, and it went into effect December 2006. The bill will save an estimated $50 billion over the next five years by regulating government spending on programs like Medicare and Medicaid, and changing student loan formulas.

According to a March 30 article in the Illinois State University Daily Vidette, one measure in the Deficit Reduction Bill rescinded a Medicaid rebate statute that allowed drug manufacturers to sell medications to health care providers who treat low-income patients at a nominal price. These health care providers, in turn, could offer patients prescription drugs at a discounted price without having to pay rebates back to the state.

The 2005 bill reduced the number of groups included in the rebate statute and eliminated colleges and universities from the list.

When the Deficit Reduction Bill went into effect, staff members at K-State's Lafene Health Center had little time to prepare for the rise in birth control costs, said pharmacist Mark Brown-Barnett.

"We were notified of the price changes in December and only had a day or two to respond," he said. "We bought as many prescriptions as possible at the lower price, but we're beginning to run out of them now."

Birth control prices rose across the board, but tradename medications with no generic alternative saw the sharpest increases.

Brown-Barnett said NuvaRing and Orthotricyclene prices rose from $11 to $49, while other birth control prescriptions such as Desogen rose from $10 to $20.

Some students have chosen to change their birth control prescriptions to less-expensive brands, but Brown-Barnett said a doctor must approve any prescription change, and sometimes new prescriptions do not yield the same results.

Student responses to the price increases have ranged from surprise to anger, which Brown-Barnett said he understood.

"College students are already paying a lot of money to go to school, and now they're paying more," he said. "We tell them it was the government program that raised prices. We didn't want it, but there is nothing we can do about it." Some insurance plans cover or supplement birth control prices, but many women, who pay for the prescriptions out of their own pockets, were hit especially hard by the price increases.

Jen Mayekawa, junior in Spanish and pre-nursing, said the rise in contraception prices left her unable to pay for her monthly prescription. She used to pay $10-12 a month for her birth control prescription, but now is looking into insurance coverage to help her pay the $50-per-month drug "Right now, I've had to stop taking it," Mayekawa said. "I'm trying to find a new clinic that my insurance company will accept, get my medical records transferred and find a new pharmacy all at once. It's an absolute three-ring circus."

While the government's intention was to reduce the national deficit, Mayekawa said cutting the Medicaid rebate statute affected a very small minority: university women.

"There are so many girls in college on birth control, and the discount gave us options to protect ourselves and regulate our bodies," she said. "I think that cutting off this discount will cause an avalanche of problems, including unplanned pregnancy. It's just going to snowball"

Once again leading the Wildcats is junior Michelle Regan, who is tied for fifth place with a score of 75 (+3). Regan is closely followed by senior teammate Katy Heffel, who is tied for 10th with a score of 76 (+4) and freshman standout Abbi Sunner, who is tied for 22nd with a score of 78 (+6).

K-State's finish at the Big 12 Championship is particularly important to the team as the Wildcats are looking to move up in the Golfweek/Sagarin Women's District Rankings and snatch a playoff berth. Last year the central regional-tournament invited only 21 teams, and if history repeats itself, the No. 22 Wildcats will be left out.

The Wildcats' best finish in the Big 12 Championship was sixth place in 2002 and 2003. Last year the team finished in ninth place at the tournament with a total score

The Wildcats will finish the tournament with 18 holes Tuesday and a final 18 holes Wednesday.

Dunn snags Freeman in draft, relies on multi-talented players

It's safe to say the first pick was a no-brainer. Quarterback Josh Freeman was the clear-cut No. 1 choice for whoever got the first pick, so that was easy.

After that, though, it got more difficult. One issue with K-State's roster became increasingly evident as the draft progressed - the team has a lot of playmakers on defense. After Freeman, 10 of the next 14 picks overall were defensive players, so it seems that could be the strength of the 2007 Wildcats. Sure, there are a lot of incoming offensive players who have yet to join the squad, but most of the experience and talent lie on the defensive side of the ball. That said, with Freeman, running back James Johnson and tight end Jeron Mastrud, my offense would give Cedrique's defense fits.

My favorite picks (besides Freeman) were my fourth and fifth picks, free safety Marcus Watts and linebacker Reggie Walker. Watts is perhaps the Wildcats' most valuable all-around player when he's healthy, so snagging him at eighth overall was a steal. Walker is K-State's only returning starting linebacker, so he would have to anchor the defense.

However, the best player on my defense could be defensive end Rob Jackson. Coach Ron Prince has repeatedly praised Jackson, saying he's impossible to block, and in the open practice Thursday he looked just that. He could be in store for a huge senior season.

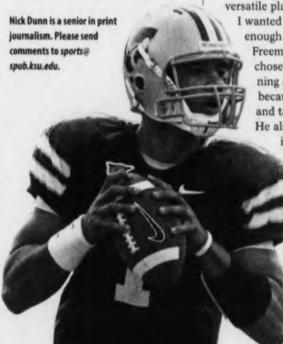

In a sketchy move, Cedrique snatched the starting specialists, kicker Jared Parker and punter Tim Reyer, in the middle of the draft, so it would appear that could hurt.

were filled.

But realistically, my team would never be punting or kicking field goals anyway, so does it really matter? The only kicking Tim Schwerdt would have to do is on extra points and kickoffs, and I think he'd be able to handle but obviously we'll never be able to see these specific teams square off. Personally, I think the final score would be something like 73-0, but the debate will be endless.

The mock draft was fun,

Flemming counters initial move with quality receivers, linemen

Because Nick took Josh Freeman with the top pick, I wanted to stock up on defensive players to counter what Freeman was going to give Nick's offensive dream team. Six of my first eight players were on the defensive side, and I drafted quality players at every position but safety.

My strategy involved starting with defensive players while taking a few offensive playmakers before Nick could pick them.

I selected linebacker bell and running back Leon Patton with my first two picks.

Campbell is arguably the most versatile player on defense, and I wanted to make sure I had enough players to pressure

Freeman. After Campbell, I chose Patton over his running mate James Johnson because of his versatility and tackle-breaking ability. He also can contribute more in the return game.

My best pick came at No. 19 overall when I took wide receiver Daniel Gonzalez. I already had Jordy Nelson, and Nick had taken Cedric Wilson. The K-State roster lacked quality receivers after Gonzalez. By taking him, I ensured I would have the better receiving corps, and

Nick would be stuck with virtually nobody to pass to.

After he selected cornerback Byron Garvin 25th overall, I decided I would make a "bold and daring" move, choosing K-State's two best kickers, Jared Parker and punter Tim Reyer. I wanted to make sure I had the top specialists in case I needed a long field goal or I needed to pin Nick deep

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING in his own territory. I've always been told that a ominant defense and quality special teams are the two most important components of a championship-caliber roster, and I wanted to make sure I had better players in those two categories.

Nick without a doubt has the better quarterback. I'll give him that. But that doesn't matter, because my defense would own his offense. His offensive line is questionable at best, and my defensive front seven would be in the backfield all game.

Even if Freeman got a chance to pass the ball, I took the best receivers, leaving him with Wilson and Toney Coleman.

Oh, I'm scared.

Our dream teams will never be able to duke it out on the field, but it was fun to see what it was like being in the war room and trying. to put together the best team pos-

Bennett a victim of unreasonable expectations, likely will go

Shed a tear for Jason Bennett, because it's probably only a matter of time before he's as good as gone. Bennett, as you might already know, is considering transferring to another school, perhaps somewhere closer to his native Jacksonville, Fla. After a disappointing season, a year in which he scored just 1.9 points and collected only 2.6 rebounds per game, Bennett's legacy will not be a memorable one.

Instead, he'll end up being the answer to a trivia question or the punch line of a crummy joke. And that's too bad, because Bennett was set up for failure at K-State and wasn't given a fair chance.

It had been years since K-State landed a player of Bennett's caliber when he signed last spring. People couldn't wait to see him showcase his fivestar talents. He was a guy many experts considered a top-30 prospect.

Only Bennett wasn't what people expected. He couldn't score, couldn't defend the low post and couldn't keep his temper. In fact, he couldn't do much of anything. At one point last year, I remember comparing him to a Furby, one of those interactive toys from the late '90s. It's kind of a stretch - a 7foot-3 athlete and a six-inch talking toy - yet, it's a fair comparison.

You see, Furby was the holiday hit, a toy that could eat and talk and play games. There was nothing Furby could not do. Or at least that's what the advertisements made you

But when Furby was removed from its package, its flaws and shortcomings were painfully obvious. Furby had a small vocabulary; it could not dance. It played a poor game of hide-and-seek and did not have a strong grasp on the English

Furby, much like Bennett, was perceived to be a total flop. Most people became so impatient with Furby they decided to put it in the microwave, the electric chair for electronic toys (if you don't believe me, YouTube it).

However, once many people gave up on Furby, the success stories started popping up all over the Internet. Turns out, Furby can be trained to do many of the things it was advertised to do. Furby can repeat familiar words, can learn names and tell jokes.

The moral here is that Furby just

Forum addresses concerns with immigration legislation

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Area residents and immigration advocates discussed the importance and future of comprehensive immigration reform Monday night in the auditorium of the Manhattan Public Library.

Melinda Lewis, director of policy advocacy and research for El Centro, Inc. in Kansas City, Kan., discussed legislation making its way through Congress and its potential to become law in the future.

"If I had to guess, I would say that it is as likely that something will get done this year than will not get done," said Lewis, member of the Strategy Council for the Campaign for Comprehensive Immigration Reform.

Although Congress agrees change to the immigration reform system is necessary. there is disagreement along partisan lines as to which solution will yield the best results for the country.

During her speech, Lewis identified five components she believes must be included in legislation to solve this problem: family reunification, a path to citizenship for undocumented workers, a work visa program that meets employer needs, humane immigration enforcement at the border and in the interior, and immigrant integration into community.

"If something can include these five points and get to the president's desk, he will sign that legislation," Lewis

Lewis outlined one such piece of legislation, the Security through Regularized Immigration and a Vibrant Economy Act of 2007, or STRIVE, and said it satisfies her five components and creates a balanced compromise along partisan lines.

Some highlights of the proposed STRIVE Act include shortening the wait for familybased citizenship applications from 12 to three years, creating a visa program by which 400,000 future immigrants per year could work toward citizenship and creating a new visa program for illegal immigrants who have established a continuous presence in the U.S. since June 1, 2006.

When addressing the issue earlier this month, President Bush said, "All elements must be addressed together, or none of them will be solved at all."

Lewis echoed this message, saying that failing to solve all elements of the problem would be unfair to families that are attempting to gain citizenship.

Although the population of Kansas' 2nd Congressional District includes less than 1 percent of undocumented population, local advocates reminded those assembled that immigration reform is still a prevalent local issue.

"Immigration reform doesn't affect just those in the lower socioeconomic part of

Student adapts lifestyle to diet without wheat products

By Dawn M. Murphy KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Allison Branch first discovered she had celiac disease about three years ago during her senior year of high school.

"I was having this score of weird symptoms, like my mouth being really swollen up for no reason, and saw several doctors that year," said Branch, sophomore in English. "On about the seventh doctor visit, it was finally discovered that I had celiac disease. I was in shock. I was

SYMPTOMS

In a normal person, the body has no problem digesting wheat. But in a person with celiac, the body cannot properly digest wheat or wheat products. The body's T-cells mistakenly identify wheat proteins as "disease molecules" and try to destroy them, thereby destroying and scarring the small intestine in the process.

Celiac disease slowly eats away at and damages the small intestine. It can stay dormant in the body for 10 to 15 years before it is diagnosed and is often misdiagnosed as irritable bowel syndrome or Crohn's disease.

The disease affects about one out of 100 people every year. According to the Web site celiaccentral.org, many as 3 million Americans may have it without knowing it." Symptoms include gastrointestinal problems, anemia, chronic fatigue, headaches, joint pain, itchy skin, nausea, mouth swelling and fever.

People who suffer from celiac disease must avoid gluten products, which proved to be a challenge for Branch.

"Up until that point, I loved eating wheat products, so I knew it was going to have to be a huge adjustment," she said. "All I could think about really was how it was going to limit me at that point, how I wasn't going to be able to eat birthday cake, pizza and doughnuts from now on. It was rough."

DIAGNOSIS

According to the book "Celiac Disease: A Hidden Epidemic" by Peter H. Green, a person with celiac disease might not even have any symptoms of the disease. The same amount of damage still is being done to a person's intestine whether the person experiences symptoms.

Though Green said a simple blood test is a good way to diagnose celiac, an intestinal biopsy is the only sure diag-

"It's kind of hard sometimes to go into the dining center and not be able to eat a lot of things there," she said. "However, I can call ahead and have them make specialty meals for me, such as a special kind of pasta and stuff like that, which is pretty cool. And it tastes great, too."

Branch said she knows at least four other students living in the residence halls who have celiac, and said more people on campus are aware of the disease now.

"I'm not worried about my dietary restrictions anymore since the dining centers are becoming more used to it," Branch said. "They've seen more students with special dietary needs within the last couple of years or so."

She said the store has seen an increase in demand for gluten-free products in the last couple of years.

Martin said she has known three people with the disease, including her father.

'What's kind of scary to me personally is that I could get this disease at any time," Martin said. "It's genetic, as you know, and it can just pop out of anywhere if someone in your family has it. However, I'm in luck if that ever happens, because the food I need is right here in the store."

Condoms come in many varieties

By Amanda Coltharp SEXUAL HEALTH AWARENESS PEER EDUCATORS

Many types of condoms exist, and you might not know all the options available to you. The following is some basic condom information.

■ Latex condom - undoubtedly the most popular condom. These condoms are thin and flexible. They also expire, so be sure to check the expiration date. As the condom ages the material can degenerate, becoming thin and brittle. This will compromise the protection against a sexually transmitted disease or pregnancy.

■ Sheepskin condom - an alternative for those with a latex allergy. This animal-skin form of protection is a safe alternative to latex but will not, protect individuals from contracting an STD. The pores in the skeepskin (the condom is actually made out of sheep intestine) are larger than the pores in a latex condom, allowing passage of bacterial and viral pathogens.

■ Polyurethane male condom - another alternative for those allergic to latex. This condom is made from a type of plastic but does not have an unpleasant rubbery taste. Polyurethane is not as flexible as latex.

■ Polyurethane female condom another alternative for those allergic to latex. Women can take the responsibility of protection on themselves. "Reality female condom" is what you'll find when looking for these on the Internet or in the store. Female condoms do have an increased failure rate compared to male condoms. This is simply because of the additional challenge of inserting them correctly. For more information on use and insertion, go to www.femalehealth.com.

■ Spermicidal condoms - have nonoxynol-9 added in the lubricant. This added lubrication is meant to kill sperm but does not kill STD-causing organisms. The condom is effective protection against STDs if it is made of latex and used correctly. Package warnings caution against repeated use of nonoxynol-9 due to the possibility of causing tissue damage (sores). Once-a-day use is probably safe.

■ Novelty Condoms – a fun way to spice things up. Novelty condoms can bring humor and fun to the bedroom, but be careful. These condoms (specifically labeled as novelty) are not made to protect from STDs or pregnancy.

Mint Tingle - this male condom has a mint flavor, a greenish color and a minty aroma.

Twisted Pleasure - with a texture made to intensify sensations and increase pleasure, this condom twists right beneath the reservoir tip.

Natural Feel - this plays off of natural body lubrication. A special water-based lubrication works with natural lubrication to increase comfort for both partners.

Shared Pleasure - both partners can enjoy the warming sensation of the lubrication used on this condom. Extended Pleasure Condoms with Climax Control - to prolong sexual intimacy without an abrupt ending for which partners might not be ready. A special lubrication added to this condom delays male ejaculation for a longer-lasting intimate session.

With so many choices, all couples are bound to find something they like. All condoms are intended for single use only - be sure to dispose of them in the trash (not the toilet) after use.

Condom malfunction is usually because of consumer error. Instructions are included with all condoms.

under there

Some types of clothing call for special undergarments

By Jessi Hernandez KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From the girl who sits in front of you in class with the dangerously low jeans to pictures we see of celebrities like Britney Spears and Paris Hilton, it is clear what we wear under our clothes doesn't always remain our business.

For those women who often fret over what to put on before donning their outfit for the day, there are some basic guidelines to keep in mind so that whatever the occasion, others won't be distracted by your undies faux pas.

WHAT TO WEAR ...

UNDER DRESS CLOTHES

"It's really going to depend on the fabric of the item," said Shannon Greenwood, store manager at Victoria's Secret in Manhattan Town Center.

For more formal occasions where one would be wearing a dress, skirt or nice slacks, Greenwood recommended women wear something seamless, like a thong or seamless panty that will prevent a visible line.

No matter your choice, however, take care to buy the correct size, she said.

"Proper fit, also, is as important UNDER WHITE SHIRTS as style," she said.

UNDER CASUAL BOTTOMS

Most women tend to wear what they find most comfortable under more casual bottoms like jeans.

Greenwood said bikini style underwear are a popular choice.

"Jeans are more forgiving, so you have more of an option as to what you can wear," she said. "But a lot of people also opt for thongs, which are very popular. I think a lot of women just really like how they look when they wear thongs, and how they work under their

UNDER WHITE BOTTOMS

A common problem posed by a popular warm-weather trend is what to wear under white bottoms. Though one's first guess might be to pull on something white, Greenwood said that is not the best option. A skin tone, or nude, is probably the best option as far as color goes, she said. A nude thong probably would work best, depending on the material of the bottoms. Another choice would be nude boy shorts.

"Even opting for a footless hosiery with a built-in panty would work great," Greenwood said. "It would give you a smooth line."

The nude shade rule also applies for bras, Greenwood said.

A white bra isn't a good option because it easily shows through, because white differs so starkly from skin tones.

"I know in Hollywood it was trendy for awhile to wear a bra that you could see (through your clothes), but we're in the Midwest," Greenwood said. "We're more conservative, so the best thing to do is find a bra that's closest to your skin tone."

UNDER CASUAL TOPS

Most basic, built-for-comfort bras are great for wearing to class or hanging out at home, Greenwood said.

A good option for everyday wear also would be something seamless.

When heading out on the town, however, most women might want to choose something fancier or cleavage-enhancing,

A capella group to perform spring concert

By Eric Brown KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 12-member music group take the stage tonight in McCain Auditorium, but don't expect a barrage of instrumentation from this ensemble's performance.

This group's accompaniment of choice is all vocals.

At 7:30 p.m. in McCain Auditorium, Cadence, an a capella breakout group will perform its annual spring show.

During their performance, the members of Cadence will croon, harmonize and beat-box their way through an hour-and-a-half of barbershop, popular music, oldies, doo-wop and country tunes, with each singer taking his turn on so-

"I think by having a variety of styles in our performance, it increases the opportunity for our audience members to hear something they will recognize and enjoy," said Jordan Trivette, senior in finance and business manager for Cadence. "It also makes the performances more enjoyable for us to have a variety of styles."

Tickets for tonight's concert are $5 for students, $8 for senior citizens and $10 for the general pub-

"This concert is basically us showcasing a year's worth of time and effort, and I think that everyone who attends will enjoy themselves," said Bryan Meyer, junior in Animal Science and Industry.

According to the Cadence Web site, the ensemble was started in 1998 by a small group of Men's Glee Club members who loved singing and desired another outlet for their voices.

Since then, members say the group has grown in popularity and performed at a number of campus and community events, including greek affairs, banquets, luncheons and singing "The National Anthem" at many K-State sporting

Because of graduation and incoming freshmen, the group's lineup has changed every year since its inception. To join the group, Men's Glee Club members try out for Cadence during the first couple weeks of each fall semester.

The 12 men who make up this year's Cadence are from all classes, ranging from freshmen to fifth-year seniors and also represent a multitude of academic departments, from pre-veterinary medicine to engineering, and from journalism to business, but with no music ma-

"We all love music, and we all love to perform," said Jeff Franzen, a senior in electrical-biomedical engineering and a five-year member of Cadence. "And we have always had very enthusiastic groups with guys that always seem to get along very well."

Brown University gender gap reflects national enrollment trend

BROWN DAILY HERALD (BROWN U.)

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - In line with a national trend, women outnumber men in terms of applicants to Brown University, those accepted to the College and undergraduates enrolled.

The admitted class of 2011 was 53 percent female, while the current undergraduate population is 52 percent female. Women made up an even greater proportion of the applicant pool - 59 percent of applicants to the college this year were female, down slightly from 60 percent last year.

Women have a lower acceptance rate than men do primarily because of low female representation in certain disciplines, said Dean of Admission Jim Miller.

"As we shift our emphasis slightly to science and engineering in the admission process, that tends to be more male-heavy in the applicant pool than some of the other disciplines," Miller said, adding that Brown is "looking for female scientists and engi-

The higher percentage of women at Brown mirrors a broader national trend. In 1970, women made up 42 percent of the U.S. undergraduate population, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, part of the Department of Education. That figure had risen to 57 percent as of July 2006, according to a report by the American Council on Education, a higher-education research organization.

According to a 2006 NCES report, "Women's undergraduate enrollment has increased more than twice as fast as men's" since 1970. "From 2006 to 2015, both men's and women's undergraduate enrollments are projected to increase. ... Women's undergraduate enrollment is projected to continue growing faster than men's enrollment."

The growing gender gap extends beyond the United States, said Tom Mortenson, senior scholar at the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education.

When I look at the international data, what's going on in the U.S. is typical," Mortenson said. "It's true in almost every country in the world, except in sub-Saharan Africa."

At 52 percent, the percentage of Brown students who are female is slightly higher than it is at other Ivy League schools. Columbia University had a 48 percent undergraduate female enrollment rate in the fall of 2005, and Cornell University was then 50 percent female. This academic year, Princeton University's female enrollment rate was 46.5 percent, Yale University was 49.3 percent female and the University of Pennsylvania was 51.9 percent female. Dartmouth College was 49 percent female, according to an undated figure on its Web site. Mortenson said the gender gap is more evident at most colleges and universities than at elite schools.

"Highly selective schools can pick anybody they want. Less selective schools are more driven by the underlying demographic forces," he said.

"There is a much more even gender distribution at more elite schools," said Sara Mead, senior policy analyst at Education Sector, an education policy think tank. "These are schools where they have many more qualified applicants than they can serve, so they're able to choose who they enroll. They have plenty of qualified men and plenty of qualified women to fill their class."

Mead and Mortenson both said the gender gap is especially pronounced among black college students - the gap shows up more at "historically black universities where 60 percent or over 60 percent of African-American students are women," Mead said.

Miller said the gender gap is a complex issue.

"There are myriad theories about the gender imbalance, and it really is a national issue. It extends through all different populations and all different racial and ethnic groups."

previous travel abroad as a preliminary screening.

After answering those questions, students will talk with a lab technician who will ask a few more questions and take a blood sample to measure the iron count.

Students wishing to donate are encouraged to eat red meat and other foods rich in iron to increase their count.

Once their iron levels are checked, students are set up to donate blood. The transfer itself takes between six and 25 minutes.

After giving blood, students are given free drinks and cookies to increase their blood sugar.

This year, participants will be registered to win door prizes like gift certificates to area businesses including Target, Chipotle, Wal-Mart, Pizza Hut and others.

"They range from a free meal, $5off coupons to $25 gift certificates," Hoffman said.

The top prize is an autographed basketball from former men's basketball coach Bob Huggins and the rest of the K-State men's basketball team.

All students donating blood this week are guaranteed a free blood drive T-shirt.

SURGERY | Scars reminders of others' generosity

Today, the 10-inch scar down the middle of my abdomen is a reminder of what happened 3 1/2 years ago. I was in the hospital for 17 days, received 16 units of blood and had 26 staples in my abdomen.

The average person has 10 pints of blood, so essentially, doctors replaced my entire blood supply. I thanked my doctors and nurses, but I will never be able to thank my true lifesavers – my blood donors. It's frustrating to know my heroes are walking around somewhere, and I will never get the chance to tell them "thank you."

Every day, I wonder when I'll have to go back to the hospital for more repair surgeries. I take a pill that helps me digest my food, and take an aspirin to prevent my blood from clotting in my left iliac artery where the surgeons put the graft. And every day, I think of the individuals who took the time to save my life by donating blood.

BENNETT | Freshman could succeed elsewhere

needed some time and some patience.

That brings us back to Bennett. He got off to a tough start here at K-State. Fans expected him to put up a double-double every night, and that simply was not going to happen. Bennett needed a chance to develop.

Realistic fans knew what the plan was all along. Former coach Bob Huggins wanted to tear Bennett down before he could build him back up. He wanted to put him through the grinder, question his toughness, see how he'd respond. Ask his teammates, and they'll tell you he showed up to practice each day with a willingness to learn and get better. That's what a freshman season is all about.

Next season was supposed to be the year where Bennett was put back together, the year where he could flourish and realize some of that fivestar potential. Now it looks like he'll spend the year sitting out because of transfer rules, ultimately putting his NBA dreams on hold.

If the end of Bennett's time here at K-State truly is winding down, I wish him the best. Heck, I'll even miss the guy. Hopefully he will find a school that's a better fit for him, and with any luck, he can avoid unreachable expectations and unnecessary pressure.

And the microwave, too.

SHOOTING | President Bush offers condolences for victims' families, pledges government support

"I feel bad – it's a great school, it's a great community," he said. "I feel bad that that's what one person can do to it.

"My fiancée (feels safe) too. There's great running and biking trails that she would use by herself even. For a girl to feel safe – that's how safe the community is."

The shootings are being called the "College Columbine," and the worst shooting in U.S. history. Until Monday morning, the largest number of Americans killed in a single shooting spree was 23, when a man drove his vehicle into a Luby's restaurant and opened fire in Kileen, Texas, on Oct. 16, 1991, according to the AP.

President Bush expressed his condolences for the victims and said their families will remain in his prayers. He also pledged federal aid to the school and said the government will help in any way possible.

Asbury said he never underestimates the power of prayer, and he hopes people across the nation will pray for the Virginia Tech campus and community.

Students across K-State's campus said they were rattled by the shootings.

Alex Foltz, junior in marketing, said his initial response was one of shock and surprise.

"My first thought was that it could happen here," Foltz said.

Foltz said some of his friends took the news of the shooting harder than others.

"I was talking about this with a friend, and she said that she no longer feels safe on campus," Foltz said.

Foltz also said he knows mass shootings do not happen often, and he felt no less safe than the day before.

K-State campus police are trained to deal with such situations, said Troy Lane, assistant director of campus police.

"Our officers have training at least once a year to learn how to deal with these types of situations," Lane said.

Lane also said the first step in the situation would be to control the shooter.

Asbury said situations like this can resonate with people across the country.

"I think if it can happen in Blacksburg, (Va.), it can happen anywhere," he said. "I think (Blacksburg) has a feel like Manhattan. It's a big school, but it's a community setting.

"It's not like it's Miami - that's the scary part."

K-State responds to mass murder at Va. Tech

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A crisis like the one at Virginia Tech can affect more students than just those at that university.

Kelly Furnas, K-State alumnus and news adviser at the Collegiate Times, the university paper at Virginia Tech, witnessed the far-reaching effects first-

"The phrase we're hearing over and over is that every student on this campus is either going to know someone who was hurt, or they are going to know someone who knows someone," Furnace said.

If a similar situation occurred at K-State, Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said the faculty and staff of K-State would respond quickly and in the most appropriate way for the students.

Bosco said K-State has a plan for a similar situation but was unwilling to give specifics about the plan.

"We have a crisis management committee that has been in place for a number of years," Bosco said.

Thomas Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said preventing a situation like this is difficult.

"There is not a lot that can be done to prevent situations like this," Rawson said. "We have programs set up to determine our response to things like Several events have been planned to help answer questions students and Manhattan residents might have.

A panel discussion with an FAQ session will take place at noon Thursday for the Manhattan community. The panel will include Bosco; Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life; Fred Newton, director of counseling services; and Derek Jackson, assistant director of housing and dining. The office of the dean of student life will sponsor the discussion.

Residence hall security to tighten: residents will show ID, guests will check in

By Ben Hedges

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State security personnel in the residence halls will take action to account for who enters the residence halls late at night.

David Yoder, residence life coordinator for the Department of Housing and Dining, said beginning in August, the residence halls will be more strict about keeping track of who is in the dorms during late hours when the doors are locked.

"It will simply be a matter of having identification checked when entering residence halls," Yoder said.

The new policy will apply to both residents and non-residents. They will be required to provide identification and register their name when they enter the building.

Residence halls practice their own policies and leave the accountability to residents. Derek Jackson, assistant director of housing and dining, said the new policy is expanding on old policies, like locked doors during overnight hours and student ID card scanners to enter the dorms late at night. The new policy is geared more toward guests who enter the dorms with residents.

"After 9 p.m., we want to know who that person is that a student brings in," Jackson said, "so that we have some accountability."

Jackson said residence halls also will be strict with guests walking around

"This relies on a student to be more responsible for their guests," he said.

James Tobin, assistant residence life coordinator, said the policy is being administered to improve student safety.

"It's basically a security measure," Tobin said. "It makes the dorm a safer place to live and doesn't restrict student rights."

Because of the shooting that took place at Virginia Tech, campus and residential security has been pushed to the forefront of many universities and colleges, including K-State. Jackson said there have been recent discussions of increased campus security and

"There has been a dialogue," Jackson said. "We want to figure out how to encompass an open campus with greater security."

Many students experience life in the residence halls when they begin at K-State, and several choose to continue the living experience throughout their years on campus. One of the complexes known for housing these upperclassmen - the Strong Complex - is also the oldest and is undergoing renovations.

Camilla Jones, resident life coordinator for the Strong Complex, said the complex has some of the oldest dormitories on campus, including Van Zile, the first permanent residence hall at K-Iones said Van Zile was built in 1926 and was an all-girls dormitory for 151 women. However, it was renovated in 1990 to become a co-ed building for 68 students.

"The complex as a whole is definitely known for returning students," she said. "I think students appreciate that it is small-

The other residence halls in the complex are Boyd Hall, which is an all-girls dormitory built in 1951, and Putnam Hall, which is a co-ed dormitory built in 1952, she said.

Though the buildings were built several decades ago, Jones said there have not been any major problems. However, she said renovations have been made, including suites added to the basements of Putnam and Boyd Hall.

Each of the halls also has a general maintenance repair technician who monitors the areas and keeps them up to date, she said.

Jones said the buildings are undergoing renovations inside in order to follow fire codes, but most of the work for the halls is to improve the landscape.

"They have been working all around campus," she said. "We

City commission members reorganize, reach franchise agreement with Westar

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new set of faces formed the city commission Tuesday night.

The commission's bi-annual reorganization began with the addition of new commissioners Bob Strawn and Jim Sherow and the exit of commissioners Ed Klimek and Jayme Morris-Hardeman. Klimek spent 10 years on the commission, and Morris-Hardeman served a two-year term.

"You know what happens when you decide not to run?" Klimek said. "A lot of folks come up and say, 'Hey, thank you for your work on the commission."

There were moments of emotion as outgoing commissioners thanked their families, city staff and others before stepping down.

City Clerk Gary Fees swore in Strawn and Sherow along with outgoing mayor Bruce Snead, who won his fourth term on the commission in the election earlier this month.

Tom Phillips was elected the city's next mayor, and the commission chose Mark Hatesohl to serve as mayor pro-tem. The results were not a surprise, as it is the tradition of the commission to elect mayors by who received the most votes.

Phillips and Hatesohl won four-year terms in 2005, so according to routine Phillips was elected mayor and Hatesohl will be named mayor next year. Strawn is expected to be named mayor the year after that, and Snead would be mayor again — his fourth term — after Strawn.

Sherow won a two-year term in the election, and therefore is not in the cycle to be mayor.

Phillips had a list of goals for his term as mayor: implementation of north and south redevelopment project, action on the quality of life bond for an indoor recreation center, adoption of redevelopment plan for the core downtown Manhattan district, a downtown historic building code, increased efficiency for government services and improved communication with the public.

The new commission approved a first reading of an ordinance authorizing the city to enter into a 20-year franchise agreement with Westar Energy, Inc. The previous agreement expired in January but will remain in effect until a new one is approved.

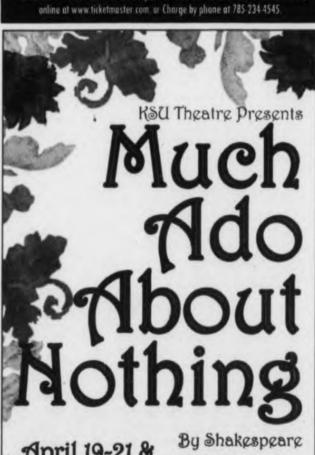

The franchise gives Westar permission to operate in the city's right-of-way. In exchange for this permission, Westar must pay a fee to the city. The new agreement would increase the fee from 3 percent of gross receipts to 4 percent, which would mean an additional $250,000 in annual revenue for the city, according to city staff.

Westar typically passes on the fee to customers. The average customer would have to pay an additional 65 cents per month under the new franchise fee, according to city staff.

Assistant City Manager Jason Hilgers said the money would be used to pay for the city government's electrical costs. He said the city spent about $1.5 million on electricity in 2006 while collecting more than $800,000 from the franchise fee.

The measures taken are necessary. Previously, any guest - or even random people could follow residents into the building without any sort of security check.

It is not a big inconvenience for students, whether they live in the hall or not, to provide proper identification when entering a place in which hundreds of college students live for much of the year. Many universities like KU already have adopted similar policies.

In previous semesters, nearly anyone could enter the halls, one way or another. This is potentially harmful to students who do not lock their doors or are up late at night. Hopefully this measure, along with future considerations, will change this.

Since thousands of students live in the halls, it would be nearly impossible to keep track of every single resident or guest in the hall. But a measure like the one K-State is instituting will help significantly.

And while it might not repel all possible intruders, this will add some much-needed security.

You have the crowded nightclubs. Techno music buzzes in the air. Drunken people press up against one another. Squeals of excitement emerge. People get frisky. Girls go wild. Photographers capture the moment. And along the way, Francis soaks up a few billion dollars.

Less than two weeks ago, members of the "Girls Gone Wild" crew visited Manhattan to capture the wild and willing women of the Little Apple. At the same time, police arrested Francis for tax evasion - a reported $20 million in false business expenses. According to Fox News reports, Francis then earned himself more time in his Florida jail cell for bribing a public servant and possession of a controlled substance and contraband.

These aren't the first allegations against Francis. Women have hounded him for years, including claims of invasion of privacy and

When it boils down to the lure of Francis' world, I don't have a problem with his deviant tax acts and I don't have a problem with some teenager's lusty, cheap thrills with a pomography collection.

My problem is with Francis' sex schemes, and the women who consent to them.

Since the '70s, pornography "sexperts" like Traci Lords and Jenna Jameson have become a significant part of American pop culture. We know who these women are and what exactly they have to offer - above and below the belt. But when average people like you and I start selling our bodies for a cheap, cotton T-shirt, we are giving more than our 15 minutes of fame to a shaky, hand-held digital camera. ## Vonnegut, famed author, should be remembered best known for writing the book "Slaughterhouse-Five" based on his experiences in Dresden, Germany, during World War II, died on April 11 at the age of 84.

A creative legend died Wednesday - an author and reporter whose intricate mind never failed to entertain millions of people.

Kurt Vonnegut,

CHILDRESS

TIME Magazine named "Slaughterhouse-Five" one of the 100 most influential books of the century, according to "The Vonnegut Web," www.vonnegutweb.com.

Vonnegut stands out among other authors because of his writing style - a mixture of satire, black comedy and the humanist movement, of which he was a supporter.

Many of his novels contain the same characters - mainly Kilgore Trout, a science fiction author - and Vonnegut's life experiences. Many even claim Trout is Vonnegut's alter-ego.

Vonnegut was never afraid to speak his mind, and the world could use more people with that quality. In a world filled with slaves to celebrity and vanity, Vonnegut was a refreshing slap in the face. The drawings interspersed in his novels and his thoughts about the Bush administration and politics today made him a man to watch.

So many of his stories and quotes made him seem more eclectic than what a biography could Vonnegut once commented on smoking (he had a heavy habit of smoking unfiltered Pall Malls), saying in his piece "In Drugs/Tobacco" that smoking is a "fairly honorable form of suicide."

This type of ironic statement is what he should be remembered for. According to a published article by CNN on April 12, Gore Vidal, a fellow author, described Vonnegut to The Associated Press as " ... sort of like nobody else. Kurt was never dull."

Perhaps what makes Vonnegut so similar - and yet so unlike - everyone else was his ability to react to his own tortured past.

His mother committed suicide, and he himself attempted suicide in the early '80s. He saw the horrors of World War II, where he was forced to carry corpses for the Germans. According to "The Vonnegut Web," he also adopted three of his sister's children after she and her husband died within days of one

In a world where everyone has their own tortured past in some way. or another, Vonnegut took that history and pain and funneled it into creating an amazing collection of novels and short stories that highlighted his ability to notice the irony and comedy in even the darkest of situations.

His last work, "A Man Without A Country," was published in January. It was composed of short pieces, mainly about President Bush and the United States' addiction to oil.

Previously forced upon high school students and popular among thespians, Vonnegut should be an author everyone should try to experience at least once, if only to read his hilarious and random commencement addresses, some of which took place at Rice University and the all-women's Agnes Scott College in 1998 and 1999.

He shall never be forgotten, among artists and schoolteachers

TOKYO - Evidence submitted to the post-World War II trials of Japanese war criminals shows Japan's military forced Asian women into sexual slavery during the war, historians said Tuesday, citing newly unearthed documents.

The findings from the mass of evidence submitted at the 1946-48 Tokyo war crimes tribunal contradict Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's recent denial that the military coerced women to be prostitutes for its troops - remarks that triggered outrage in South Korea and China.

Historians say hundreds of thousands of women were forced into Japanese front-line brothels in the '30s and '40s.

RCPD issues 21 MIPs, targets parties

By Leann Sulzen KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County police officers issued 21 citations' for minor in possession this weekend as part of a threemonth long special patrol.

The RCPD received a $9,000 grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation to target minors in possession for three weeks each in the months of March, April and May.

Sgt. Steve Boyda said the special patrol will occur each weekend through graduation weekend, May 11-13.

So far, the RCPD has issued 50 citations for minor in possession. Boyda said more citations were issued this weekend because of the nice weather. Warm temperatures lead to more outdoor parties and drinking, Boyda said.

"That is what the biggest giveaway is when you are driving down the street and you see 50 to 100 people standing outside," he said.

Boyda said the amount of underage drinking has not changed much, but more attention is given to the issue when the RCPD gets funding to do special patrols.

Right now, the RCPD is short on officers, Boyda said, so they do not have the power to do extra things like minor-in-possession patrols unless they get special funding to pay for the extra work officers put in.

"If we were able to get up to strength," he said, "we'd possibly be able to have a more focused approach on violations than what we can currently do."

Too much, little water both concerns when exercising

Unless your throat is dry and scratchy or you've just finished a grueling and sweaty workout, water intake might not be on the top of your priority list. Or maybe you follow the latest trend and always have a bottle of water within arm's length. Either way there are consequences that accompany both dehydrating and over-hydrating your body.

MELISSA HAUG In some instances, individuals are not familiar with their body's thirst signals, resulting in dehydration. Other times, individuals feel the need to take a gulp every few minutes, causing overhydration. Believe it or not, there is a way to find a balance in fluid consumption.

Almost anyone can recite how uch water they should drink in a single day (8-12 cups), but not many are aware of the consequences of over-hydrating. Over-hydrating can lead to dangerously low blood sodium, which can be just as severe as dehydration.

Because the body requires a balance of fluid and sodium to function properly, sodium balance is necessary to regulate nerve impulses. Too much water and too little salt leads to an imbalance, called hyponatremia.

This imbalance could become life-threatening in athletes who work out vigorously.

> Over-hydration depends on the rapidity of fluids consumed. Drinking fluids too fast depletes sodium and increases the rate of urine production, causing a system imbalance.

> As physically active individuals, it is imperative you know when and if you are hydrated before a workout.

The American Council on Exercise calculates the amount of fluids someone should drink based on a number of factors like sweat rate, environmental conditions (temperature, type of activity over various terrain, etc.) and intensity of the activity.

close attention to sweat rate during a workout.

Fluid replacement guidelines recommend the goal of fluid replacement is to replenish 100 percent of sweat lost during exercise.

This is calculated best by assessing your body weight before and after physical activity. By adding the amount of weight lost (in ounces) to the amount of fluid consumed during exercise (in ounces) you will know how many ounces of water to consume, according to www. propelfitnesswater.com. Fluids consumed should be equal to your

As a rule of thumb, consume two cups of fluid for every pound of water lost during exercise.

While over-hydration can be serious, it occurs less than dehydration, which also affects an individual's workout.

Not getting enough fluids reduces the ability to sustain exercise over long periods of time.

By drinking water, you maintain your body's ability to deliver oxygen and nutrients to working muscles and cells. It is vital you find a balance in fluid consumption to prevent serious problems in the

To ensure the correct hydration, fluid per day.

Also check that you are urinating at least four times per day and the urine is clear to pale yellow. Any darker might be an indicator of dehydration, so drink more water.

Marathon runner hopes to run Ironman

By Trent Scott KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even in the rain and blowing wind, thousands of the world's best endurance athletes competed Monday in the 111th Boston Marathon. The trek took them through 26.2 miles of the Massachusetts metropolis. The race winner, Robert Cheruiyot, finished with a time of just 2 hours, 14 minutes, 13 seconds; a grueling feat to say the least.

For many of us, completing a marathon is unfathomable. The mere thought of voluntarily running 26.2 miles seems almost ridiculous. But for one K-State student, that ludicrous dream has become a reality.

Collin Baldwin, senior in nutrition and exercise sciences and a personal trainer at Peters Recreation Complex, is no stranger to running marathons. I spoke with him recently about his accomplishments.

Q: How did you start running marathons?

A: As I got older, I needed a sport or activity that would allow me to stay competitive. I ran in high school and just started training again when I decided that this is what I wanted to do.

Q: How long have you been runtember in Omaha, Neb., and my last one was in January in Phoenix. My next planned marathon is this September.

Q: How long has it taken you to finish your races, and what is your best marathon memory?

A: My first race I finished in 3 hours, 41 minutes. My second I ran in 3 hours, 36 minutes. I loved Phoenix because of the atmosphere around with all the bands playing, and the best memory is crossing the finish line.

Q: How do you train to run a marathon?

A: My training usually starts about four to five months before the race. I start out running about 25 miles per week, with different-length runs on my running days.

When I peaked in my training, was running anywhere from 40 to 50 miles per week. The longest runs were about 20 miles at one session. I couldn't even guess how many miles I have logged now. Q: What would you say to some#### one who is thinking about running a marathon? A: I would say to start small. Try first doing some smaller races to see if you like it, such as a 5 or 10 K (Kilometer).

If you want to push more, you need to dedicate yourself to the run. You need to be diligent in your race preparation, and go on your runs even if you aren't feeling like it.

You need to put the miles in, and plan out a good nutrition plan for your training also. You will be burning a lot of calories and the only way to have energy for tomorrow is to feed today. Lastly, just have fun.

Q: What's next for you?

A: I plan to run races for the rest of my life. The Ironman (Triathlon) is my goal. To have enough time to plan and train for that competition is what keeps me motivated to beat myself up training every day.

I refuse to stop in the hopes of making that dream come to be realized.

Water polo players make waves with formation of new club

By Brie Handgraaf KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's part soccer, part basketball, part wrestling – and a whole lot of swimming. Few sports combine elements of so many activities, but the water polo club at K-State provides students an opportunity to learn one that does just that.

"Water polo is kind of like soccer in the water," said Andrew Cook, senior in finance. "There are two goals at either side of a pool, and you are trying to score by throwing a ball into the goals. You can only touch the ball with one hand, and the game is very physical as you are basically battling your defender under water."

Paul Jarvis, freshman in architecture, has played water polo on club teams since seventh grade, and also played for his high school team.

He loved the sport so much, he said, he started the club and has been building a team since January.

"No one came with very much water polo experience, so right now we are just learning the game and working on conditioning," Jarvis said. "Games won't start until next year, but we are in the Great Plains Division of the Intercollegiate Water Polo Association, so we will play teams like Minnesota, Kansas and Marquette, as well as others."

Daniel Lamm, freshman in interior architecture and product design, grew up in California and said he saw others play water polo in high school, and always wanted to give it a try.

"When I found out there was a water polo club starting up, I figured it would be the perfect time to get involved," he said. "The best part of water polo is having team members who love the pain and the water as much as I do."

To stay on top of their game, team members practice twice a week in the Natatorium and swim about 120 laps a week individually.

"Water polo is the most demanding sport I have ever played," Cook said. "You are basically sprinting back and forth in a pool, and the only rest you get are brief moments when you are treading. On top of this you are wrestling your defender under the water the whole time. It is very tiring."

Students find nanny jobs rewarding, good sources of income

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Laura Cline, freshman in family studies and human services, was in middle school and high school, she realized she could make $50 on a Saturday night.

"I could say yes or no and get homework done," she said.

This started Cline on what she said has been a profitable and flexible line of business baby-sitting.

LIFE EXPERIENCE

After Cline came to Manhattan, she said she decided to continue sitting and tried to find a way to make herself available. While searching, Cline said she found the K-State's Career and Employment Services Web site listed postings from several families seeking someone to care for children.

Cline works for a few families in town and said she enjoys the opportunity to be off campus and have children around.

Over the years, Cline said she has worked with a variety of children, including some with anxiety disorders, ADHD, ADD or disciplinary problems.

"I've become extremely confident with all children," she said. "Using the disciplinary skills I've learned in the last eight years, being the authority figure – it becomes a second-parenting thing."

Caring for children is about adapting, Cline said.

"It's not just going over and popping in a video," she said.

Although Cline said she is confident in her abilities, she has had a few difficult experiences that have taught her a lot. When she was a senior in high school, Cline was left with a 6week-old baby who was sick.

"I didn't have experience being with a kid that young," she said.

Cline said she stayed up that night, telling stories, singing and holding the baby. "I was just holding him, having him cry," she said. "I'd done everything I could think of, which made me flash forward to when I have kids.

"You want so badly for them to lay down and fall to sleep. You just want everything to be within your control. I still remember that night, holding Ryan, so small and so help-less."

A SECOND FAMILY

Kristina Kleinsasser, firstyear veterinary student, cares for three children, Greyson, 5; Gage, 4; and Grace, 2. Their family is from Ashland, Kan., and drives to Manhattan for every basketball and football home-game weekend. Kleinsasser met the family through mutual friends and has been caring for the children for about one year.

One of the perks, she said, has been the ability to go to sporting events at K-State while caring for the children.

"I definitely sit in some pretty sweet seats," she said. "But I take a lot of bathroom breaks with three kids so I do miss parts of the game."

She also said the children like to read books, bake and decorate cookies, visit places around Manhattan and play hide and seek.

Kleinsasser, who is from South Dakota, said she began baby-sitting a long time ago, caring for younger cousins and children from her church. She recalled one of the worst experiences was a trip to the South Dakota State Fair when she had six children in tow.

"They guy at the smoothie stand felt sorry for me and offered to give free smoothies to all of the kids," she said. "And he definitely thought they were all six mine, and I was in high school at the time."

When Kleinsasser arrived to K-State, two of the men she worked with both had children in the first few months of her freshman year, and she began to care for their newborns.

Now in veterinary school, Kleinsasser said working in child care is a good way to sustain a cash flow with her busy schedule.

"It's been a nice break from school," she said, "and I can't have a job because I'm in vet school so this is my only form of income."

The best part of baby-sitting, Kleinsasser said, is meeting and fitting into a new family unit.

"They become my family here since I'm so far away from mine," she said. "The best part is feeling like a part of a family here. That's what I miss about

She said the biggest lesson

she has learned is patience.

"There's a lot of skills you learn," Kleinsasser said. "Mostly how to serve people when you don't feel like it."

'NOT AN OFFICE JOB'

Lisa Davis, sophomore in elementary education, grew up in a small Kansas community and said baby-sitting was the way she made money. When she came to Manhattan, Davis said she found an advertisement in the newspaper for a family who needed a sitter.

Davis takes care of a 2-yearold girl a few times each week.

"It's just a lot of fun," she said. "I like spending time with her. I'm going into elementary education so it's good to work with kids - it's nice to be working with kids."

Davis said child care is an easy way to make money and is "not an office job where I'm just sitting."

After years of caring for children, she said she knows she would like to have children some day - but not yet.

"I definitely do," she said.
"It made me realize I do want kids. I just don't want them right now."

Nautical style may be here for long haul

Unless you have been living under a seashell for the past few years, you have undoubtedly noticed the seaworthy influence on designers' resort lines - clothing for the fashion season between spring and winter. Nautical fashion is everywhere.

PODHAJSKY

At first, I didn't buy into the whole yachting trend, passing it off as just that - a trend. I didn't want to waste my money on striped tanks and anchor chains just to store them in my closet after a year when the trend passed.

However, I was sorely mistaken. Nautical fashion is stronger and more popular than ever. It shows up from the runways of Milan all the way to the racks of Wal-Mart. Yachting influences are popping up everywhere with brassy buttons, red accents, pirateinfluenced fashion jewelry, oceanfaded fabrics and stripes.

"Adventure, style, culture, freedom, bravery and rum" ex-L.L.Bean designer Alex Carleton has said of his vintage-style clothing line, Rogues Gallery. "How could we not be obsessed with the nautical world?"

To try your hand at the maritime craze, pick navy, white, red and gold color schemes. Also look for '40s sailor-influences, including stacked and/or brassy buttons, striped shirts with scoop neck ties, high waists, crisp tunics, cinched belts made of thick leather or rope and naval patterns including chains, anchors, circles, etc.

Adding a feminine touch can help make these oh-so-retro looks new again with lace or eyelet trimmings and frills.

Layering necklaces with wheels, flags and/or gold charms also provide a modern accent to your seafaring look. Bright, multi-colored, paisley or abstractpatterned headbands and headscarves are great accessories.

But it's not just female fashion that has been hopping on board with the trend. Menswear also is diving into the nautical wave.

Leather boat-shoes (think sophisticated, lace-less loafers) are extremely popular and charming as well as brass-buttoned blazers and pea-coats.

For men, try pairing a blazer with relaxed-fit khaki, linen pants or jeans. Neutral-toned shirts and polos look best with this look. You might also want to consider a pair of anchor-patterned swim-trunks for your weekend excursions

So, fair maiden or mate, unless you plan on walking the fashion plank this season, you'd better set sail for the mall and pick up a few sea-worthy items before it's too

London artist successfully reinvents soulful R&B sound

"Back to Black" ****

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Two thoughts immediately occurred to me when I first looked at Amy Winehouse sitting on the cover of her latest album, "Back to Black." First, with Winehouse's black-dyed, stylized hair, numerous tattoos and piercings and beautiful face with her pouty, open lips, I thought, Winehouse is the woman of my dreams.

The second thought arose as I popped "Back to Black" into my CD player. As the first song, "Rehab," began, I thought the producers just were sampling an old Motown song. From looks alone, I had no idea Winehouse would sound like the second coming of Etta James.

Winehouse, a 23-year-old vocal ist from north London, effectively recreates the sound of vintage '50s and '60s girl groups and soul vocalists from the Motown era. She accomplishes this with the help of pop/hip-hop producers Mark Ronson and Salaam Remi.

Winehouse succeeds at creating a modern-day soul classic - where others like Christina Aguilera's "Back to Basics" failed - by successfully capturing the sound, charm, and, well, soul of traditional R&B, rock-'n'-roll and soul music. Winehouse's lyrics truly set her ahead of the rest, because they are brutally honest, completely original and entirely unconventional. Winehouse pulls no punches, and few artists

Outside of her music, Winehouse also has made a splash in British tabloids because of her rowdy behavior and heavy alcohol consumption in public and during shows.

In her first single, "Rehab," Winehouse addresses her alcohol problems by basically saying she is aware of her drinking, but she isn't willing to spend 10 weeks in rehab to accomplish her goal of scaling

The single, produced by Ronson, is a quasi-gospel track that contains a funky organ line, an insistent horn groove and a chorus of backing vocals that perfectly compliment Winehouse's whiskey-soaked vocals.

Elsewhere on the album, Winehouse focuses on relationships past and present.

Where other pop artists would fill songs like these with trite observations on love and loss, Winehouse makes her songs memorable by including creative, often autobiographical, lyrics within the 10 tracks on "Back to Black."

An excellent example is "You Know I'm No Good." Over a bed of soulful horns and hip-hop-tinged drums. Winehouse tells her lover how she knows she can't be trusted. Even in the first verse, Winehouse's lover knows something is awry - "You say, 'What did you do with him today?'/And sniffed me out like I was Tanqueray." Later in the song, Winehouse is with her boyfriend in the bathroom when he notices suspicious carpet burns on her back, which gives away what she was doing the night before. The chorus impeccably confirms Winehouse's feelings of remorse: "I cheated myself, like I knew I would/I told you I was trouble, you know that I'm no good." Just as in "Rehab," Winehouse knows her behavior is inappropriate, but she is either unwilling to make heartbreak sound so good.

Later, on the album's title track, Winehouse again examines disloyalty, but the roles switch. The production could rival anything from Phil Spector's '60s pop/soul wall-of-sound heyday, and the lyrics are especially heart-wrenching. "We only said goodbye with words/I died a hundred times/You go back to her, and I go back to

And so continues the rest of "Back to Black." Winehouse is constantly looking for redemption and love that will last, but those things are always just out of reach.

"Love is a losing game," Winehouse depressingly professes in the song of the same name. In Winehouse's world, it is a constant cycle of love, lust and loss. It makes for a compelling listen, and with such excellent production and the exquisite alto of Winehouse, the bitter pills of each song go down that much

But every time Winehouse's heart gets crushed, she makes the realization that she is strong, she is her own woman, and she will move on.

Winehouse perfectly appraises her situation in "Tears Dry On Their Own." As a lover leaves, Winehouse realizes, "He walks away/He takes the day, but I'm grown/And it's OK/Tears dry on their own."

Winehouse's talent is unquestionable, and it is exciting to hear it is still possible to create a completely relevant modern-day soul record.

I secretly hope Winehouse can continue her lifestyle without completely melting down, because her heartbreak makes for some of the most vital music to come out in some time.

Manhattan officials select new director of public works

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan has a new director for its Department of Public Works, city officials announced Tuesday.

Dale Houdeshell, manager of special projects for the city of Chesterfield, Mo., will begin the job May 21, according to a statement from the city.

The position was vacated when former director Jeff Hancock resigned in December. City Engineer Robert Ott served as interim director while the city looked for a replacement.

"I'm excited about Dale coming," Ott said. "He has a wealth of experience on a multitude of public works."

City Manager Ron Fehr

said city officials considered 12 applicants for the position and narrowed the pool to two candidates before the final decision. He said Houdeshell was chosen because of his experience with growing communities and dealing with other jurisdictions, as well as broad expertise with traffic, planning and utilities.

"We feel is he has the ability to step in and help out immediately," Fehr said.

Houdeshell earned a bachelor of science degree in civil engineering from the University of Missouri-Rolla and is serving as Region IV director of the American Public Works Association, according to the city's statement. The APWA recognized him as one of the top 10 public works leaders of the year in 1997.

According to the statement, Houdeshell worked as director of transportation and special projects, manager of public works services and city engineer for Saint Peters, Mo., from 1987 to 2005.

Services of the public works department include maintaining streets, storm drains, the city's fleet of vehicles, engineering, traffic control, drinking water and waste water.

Houdeshell also will be responsible for overseeing the public works capital improvement program, developing bids and specifications and administering contracts for design and construction of capital improvement proj-

House approves new measures to protect taxpayers from fraud

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The House marked Tax Day on Tuesday by approving new protections against some modern-day dangers facing taxpayers, including identity theft, deceptive Web sites and loan sharks.

The Taxpayer Protection Act, passed 407-7, also will make it easier for taxpayers to retrieve property lost as a result of a wrongful Internal Revenue Service levy and directs the IRS to notify lower-income people that they qualify for the Earned Income Tax Credit.

"We must protect taxpayers from being victims of fraudulent tax schemes, misleading Web sites and predatory refund loans," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga.

The bill, which requires Senate action, directs the IRS to notify a taxpayer when there is evidence of unauthorized use of his or her identity, or that of a dependent's.

The bill also clarifies rules that prohibit the use of domain names, such as IRS.org instead of the government's IRS.gov, that could be used in scams to deceive taxpayers.

The measure also restricts the IRS in providing information to lenders offering refund anticipation loans that can be deemed predatory.

Some tax preparers have come under fire for charging high interest for loans, often to low-income people, in anticipation of tax refunds.

Rep. Jim Ramstad, Ramina, said he hoped denyating lenders information on debt indicators would not make the problem worse by prompting lenders to increase interest rates.

Ramstad, like Lewis a senior member of the Ways, and Means Committee, said he was pleased the bill contained language to combat-fraudulent returns filed by inmates in federal prisons.

Deputy Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration Michael Phillips said, last week that in 2005 there, were 20,000 fraudulent prise, oner returns claiming morethan $834 million.

Kansas lawmakers increase push for biodefense lab

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - A week before site selection teams visit Kansas, the state's congressional delegation is increasing the push for a new federal biodefense lab to be built in Leavenworth, Kan., or Manhattan.

A state task force formed earlier this year to land the site shows Kansas is making the National Bio- and Agro-Defense Facility "a critical national and state priority," lawmakers said in a letter Tuesday to Department of Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff.

Eighteen sites in 11 states are competing for the new lab, which could pump $3.5 billion into the local economy over the next 20 years.

The field is expected to be narrowed in June and a final decision will be made in October 2008. The new lab would replace an existing facility on Plum Island, N.Y.

The letter outlines the merits of locating the $451 million research center in either city in Kansas. Lawmakers said the large number of agriculture research and development sites along the Interstate 70 corridor make the state an ideal location for the lab.

"Both sites have demonstrated the research capacity, strong public support and necessary infrastructure to meet DHS' requirements to fulfill and implement NBAF," said the letter signed by Sens. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., Sam Brownback, R-Kan., and all four of the state's U.S. House

The site near Fort Leavenworth is close to premier animal health companies and can draw on the University of Kansas and its experience in health research.

The other possible, the K-State campus in Manhattan, already has the National Agriculture Biosecurity Center and houses the Biosecurity Research Institute.

According to the letter, DHS researchers could use that facility to begin their work immediately after the site is designated, five years earlier than if the agency had to construct an entirely new building.

Other states being considered include Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, California, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina and Wisconsin.

DHS officials have said land acquisition, research capabilities, work force and community support are key criteria for site selection.

The new biodefense lab would bring about 1,000 construction jobs and 250 science-based jobs to the community once the project is completed by 2015.

In a speech to a joint session of the Legislature earlier this year, Roberts, who has spearheaded the state's efforts to land the project, encouraged more state support to land the lab.

Spring freezes cause damage to Kansas wheat, alfalfa crops

WICHITA - Spring freezes and a storm that brought heavy, wet snow have caused extensive damage to Kansas' winter wheat crop, with preliminary reports estimating nearly 70 percent of fields hurt to varying degrees.

In addition, the state's first cutting of alfalfa hay has been lest and some early corn sown in southeast Kansas will have to replanted, according to agricultural experts.

Kansas Agriculture Secretary Adrian Polansky, whose own wheat crop suffered freeze damage, said Tuesday that the hardest-hit part of the state is a corridor running from northcentral to south-central Kan-

The most significant damage is around Salina and McPherson.

It will take another week to 10 days to assess the significance of wheat-crop losses statewide, he said.

"I certainly believe that there will be a significant reduction in the Kansas wheat crop this year from several days of cold temperatures. I think I can say that without doubt," Polansky said. Polansky, who had just come from a state emergency board meeting on the topic, said the Agricultural Statistics Service will do a survey around May 1 in which it will be able document fairly accurately the yield losses so the state can seek emergency disaster declarations for affected counties.

Kansas Agricultural Statistics Service reported Monday that just 31 percent of the winter wheat crop had escaped freeze damage. It estimated freeze damage to the rest of the crop as 25 percent light, 26 percent moderate, and 18 percent severe.

"That has been devastating to the first-cutting alfalfa crop, but the good thing about alfalfa, it can come back," said Jim Shroyer, K-State Extension wheat specialist. "Wheat is not a perennial; it is an annual. If it is dead, it is done."

Damage to the wheat crop was related to the cloud cover during the Easter weekend freeze. It was several degrees warmer in the western part of the state, where the cloud cover helped moderate temperatures, Shroyer said. But temperatures plummeted in the eastern and central parts of the state.

Freeze damage symptoms are showing up mostly in the eastern two-thirds of Kansas, Kansas farmers are trying to determine how destructive the freeze was, and fields are still too wet to replant.

"We can't plant corn. We can't plant anything," Shroyer said. "Nobody is doing anything other than wringing their hands."

Although some damaged winter-wheat acres may have to be torn up, Kansas farmers who had applied certain residual herbicides to their fields will be limited in what crops they can now plant, he said.

herbicide-treated wheat fields cannot be immediately replanted with corn, leaving just the options of soybeans or sorghum, he said.

"Those of us that are farmers are facing very difficult decisions," Polansky said, noting they have to wait long enough to ascertain the yield loss.

Another complicating factor is that crop insurance will not fully cover two crops. That means that if farmers choose to plant another crop and insure it, insurance will pay for only 30 percent of their indemnity losses on the wheat crop, Polansky said.

Up until Easter weekend, was looking like Kansas would have a bountiful crop that would bring in high prices in the wake of last year's

Since then, winter-wheat conditions have deteriorated.

On Monday, Kansas Agricultural Statistics rated the state's wheat condition as 27 percent poor to very poor, 37 percent fair, 26 percent good and 10 percent excellent.

Others found hope in the crop's resilience in adverse weather conditions.

"It is a setback to the that crop, but I don't think we can call it a disaster yet," said Dana Peterson, producer policy specialist for the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers.

But she also noted the state could have cold weather as

Book sale benefits Hale Library

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Friends of the K-State Libraries' semi-annual book sale is in Hale Library this week. The sale is a fund-raiser for the library's general fund, and the money will be used to purchase supplies for Hale, said Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of K-State libraries

"We have two book sales a year, one around this time and one before Christmas," she said.

There were hundreds of books available, as well as tapes, movies and old textbooks. None of the books sold are from the permanent collection at Hale, McCulloh said. The group has donation bins at the east and west Dillon's locations, and many books are given directly to the Nancy Bolsen, director of adult student services and member of the Friends of the Libraries, worked at the cash register Tuesday.

Bolsen said members of the organization work in onehour blocks during the sale to help people looking for books.

"It's ... a great chance for students to build on their personal collections," Bolsen McCulloh volunteered to help students find books and help where she was needed, and also explained the process of what happens to books that are not sold.

"I don't want any books left on the tables when this is over," she said. "Wednesday at 1 o'clock we will have $5 boxes of books that will be all you can carry."

Some of the books that are not sold in the all-youcan-carry event will be sent to universities in Afghanistan. McCulloh said all of the appropriate books will be sent to help the libraries there.

Before she sets the books out, McCulloh said she goes through the books to see if any could be added to the permanent collection of the

"We have added about 10,000 to 15,000 books to our catalogue that way," she said.

John Caton, fifth-year student in women's studies, said he regularly goes to the book sales at the library.

"I am here to expand my library," Caton said. "I'm not looking for anything in particular. I just browse until I see something that I like."

Caton said he attends the sales because he enjoys the journey that books take him

New, '31 flavors' cereal café reflects growing trend of dry-goods dining

Jenny Bartholomew, sophomore in elementary education, said the massacre caused her to rethink her safety on campus.

"You should not have to worry about being shot when you go into class," she said. "Schools are supposed to be a safe place."

Mourning the massacre

Va. Tech shooter mailed package between sprees

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLACKSBURG, Va. - Between his first and second bursts of gunfire, the Virginia Tech gunman mailed a package to NBC News containing pictures of him brandishing weapons and video of him delivering a diatribe about getting even with rich people.

"This may be a very new, critical component of this investigation. We're in the process right now of attempting to analyze and evaluate its worth," said Col. Steve Flaherty, superintendent of Virginia State Police. He gave no details on the material, which NBC said it received in Wednesday morning's NBC said a time stamp on the package indicated the material was mailed in the two-hour window between the first burst of gunfire in a high-rise dormitory and the second fusillade, at a classroom building. Thirty-three people died in the rampage, including the gunman, 23-year-old student Cho Seung-Hui, who committed suicide.

The package included a manifesto that "rants against rich people and warns that he wants to get even," according to a law enforcement official who spoke to the Associated Press on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak about the MSNBC said the package included a CD-ROM on which Cho read his manifesto.

Late Wednesday, MSNBC showed a photo from the package of Cho glaring at the camera, his arms outstretched with a gun in each hand. He wears a khaki-colored military-style vest, fingerless gloves and a backwards, black baseball cap. "NBC Nightly News" planned to show some of the material Wednesday night.

NBC News President Steve Capus said the network promptly turned the material over to the FBI in New York.

The material is "hard-to-follow ... disturbing, very disturbing very angry, profanity-laced," he said on the MSN-BC Web site. Among the materials are digital video files showing Cho talking

Students honor shooting victims with candlelight vigil

By Scott Girard KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Branches rustling in the wind and the occasional sniffle were the only sounds as students gathered Wednesday night in Bosco Student Plaza to honor the victims of Monday's Virginia Tech University shootings

During the 30-minute candlelight vigil, people shared their grief, prayers and thanks with the hundreds of others who congregated in the plaza. Behind a table with 32 lit candles forming the letters "VT," students leaders shared their thoughts about the shootings. Many held and lit candles, as prayers honored those affected by the tragedy.

One of the students who spoke was a 2004 Virginia Tech graduate. While she held back tears, Aisha Salazar said, "As an alumna, my heart goes out to all those Hokies."

Salazar, a graduate student in food science at K-State, said she had friends who knew shooting victims.

She said her friends at Virginia Tech are grateful for the support.

"One of my friends said, 'All these vigils and services are helpful. It brings a tear to my eye," Salazar

Virginia Tech is similar to K-State, Salazar said. Like K-State, it is a land-grant school, and the size of its enrollment and surrounding community are comparable. Many of the same programs, like engineering, agriculture and veterinary medicine, are offered at Virginia Tech, and most of the buildings on both campuses are made of limestone. She also said the people at both universities have similar demeanors.

"One of the biggest similarities is just how nice people are, here and there," she said.

Salazar was not the only Virginia Tech graduate at K-State. Butch Kukanich, associate professor of anatomy and physiology, said he knew many of the people affected by the killings, including the son of a professor who died.

"It's really hard to put into words," he said. "It's good to see people who care. Something like this - it's just amazing."

Bomb threat proves to be false alarm

By Leann Sulzen KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bomb threat called in to a local business Tuesday was found to be a false alarm.

The Riley County Police Department received a call at about 10:30 a.m. from an employee at Alorica, a customer service management provider, saying someone called and said there was a bomb in the building and it was going to go off, Lt. Kurt Moldrup said.

Employees evacuated the building at 5970 Sykes Blvd. before police were called.

A second call came in to the call center threatening that someone was going to come into the building and shoot the employees, Moldrup

Both times the caller's voice sounded male, he said.

When police arrived, employees remained outside while officers searched the building.

'We checked the building and didn't find any evidence of anything suspicious," Moldrup said.

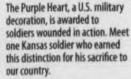

These threats are a sampling of similar false bomb scares that have been reported across the country following Monday's shooting rampage at Virginia Tech University, where 33 people were killed.

The RCPD has no suspects, and the case is still under investigation.

Ready for the Spring Game?

By Stephanie Gorges KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Football season is still a few months away, but the annual Spring Game is right around the corner. The Wildcats, playing as the purple and white teams, will put their off-season training on display in a scrimmage Saturday at 6 p.m. at Snyder Family Stadium. Before you buy your tickets, test your dedication to the team and your knowledge of the Spring Game and K-State football.

Greek members experience homeless life for charity

Students spend time in shelters made of cardboard, duct tape

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cardboard boxes, duct tape and holiday lights line the porch of the Kappa Delta sorority house, where several greeks have been called home for four nights as a part of Homeless for Hunger.

The event is Alpha Tau Omega's annual philanthropy. It benefits the Flint Hills Breadbasket and involves most of K-State's sororities, said Jared Keating, freshman in construction science management and member of ATO.

"It is our biggest philanthropy of the year," he said.

; Keating said donations to the organization are made through Homeless for Hunger
T-shirt sales and participant fees, as well as alumni donations.

The greek chapters also send volunteer collectors to ask for cans outside of Wal-Mart, he said.

Based on years past, Keating said he expects the event to raise $1,500 to $2,000 for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Participants are provided with cardboard and two rolls of duct tape to build a shelter that will last them four nights on the porches and lawns of the sorority houses, said Ryan Thomas, freshman in construction science management and member of ATO.

"It depends on which house you're assigned to," he said, "and it's all kind of random"

Thomas and Adam Love, freshman in kinesiology and pre-dentistry and member of ATO, said they needed eight hours to build their shelter on the porch of Kappa Delta. They said they ran out of cardboard and had to find more in dumpsters.

Other participants used pieces of cardboard to make a cave-like shelter at Kappa Alpha Theta, and members dwelling at Chi Omega used a similar setup, which functioned more as a tent.

Thomas said each group had three to five men from ATO and seven to eight women from different houses.

He said the participants were instructed to shower sparingly in order to better experience life as a homeless person.

"We have some juniors and seniors that do it religiously and hardly shower," Thomas said.

Keating said members of ATO run food to the different groups, but sometimes group members are invited to eat at the sorority houses.

Love said the event draws a lot of participants.

"For one, it's a fun event," he said.

The philanthropy reminds people of the impoverished people in the area and gives them a chance to experience how they live, Keating said.

'Much Ado' to premiere at Nichols

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State theater will display a little comedy and wit in its final performance of the semester. A group of 15 theater students will perform Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday and April 25-28 in Nichols Theatre.

Tickets cost $10 for students and children, $13 for military and $15 for the public.

The play revolves around two couples, one ready to marry and the other far from it, and the trials and tribulations in their relationships, said Brant Wadsworth. Wadsworth plays Benedick, who is skeptical about love for much of the Wadsworth said Shakespearean plays can be hard to perform, but they also are rewarding and enjoyable.

"His plays make us learn about ourselves while laughing," he said. The play should be interesting, Wadsworth said, because its aesthetic factors.

"The Shakespearean language is beautiful, and the costume design is very interesting," he said.

Jordan Martens, junior in theater, said the costumes took a while to get used to because their style is much older and different than those of today.

Although the clothes are an older style, Wadsworth said they will have a modern touch.

Clothes will not have the only modern element of the production. Martens said a few songs and dances were added that were not originally in the

"Since we are all younger and most of the people in the crowd will be younger, we try to take it into our own and draw from what is happening in our lives now," she said.

Marci Maullar, associate professor in theater, said the set design for the production was different because there was not a lot of money to work with, so students had to be creative with the design.

"It was very interesting for the designers," she said. "They used less funds than previous productions and had to think, 'What can we do with this limited amount of resources?"

The production can be a large time commitment for the performers, designers and stage crew. Martens said the staff worked for six days a week for several weeks. That commitment paid off, though, she said.

"Monday night we all said we were ready for a real audience," Martens said.

With the production running seven days during this and next weekend, Maullar said she encourages students to experience an "understandable" Shakespearean comedy.

"It's pure entertainment," she said. "It's Shakespeare. Any time you see Shakespeare, it's a joy."

Fountain destroyed at University Gardens, likely will cost at least $2,628 to replace

By Sarah Rasmussen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fountain at the K-State University Gardens was vandalized last weekend.

Campus police were unavailable for comment, but workers at the gardens said they believe the vandalism took place between Saturday night and Monday morning.

Thomas D. Warner, head of the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Services, said he thought the fountain was pushed over, as it was completely shattered.

He said the vandalism will delay the expansion of the gardens, because money now must be raised to replace the fountain.

"It was purchased with money donated by the Riley County Master Gardeners, and replacing it will cost extra money that we will have to raise first," he said.

Noon until 7 p.m.

Scott McElwain, research assistant for the department of horticulture, said University Gardens is expanding the wall project, and once completed, the funding will be exhausted.

"Without including labor and supplies the fountain will cost $2,628 to replace – we may need to look at an alternative garden fixture that is less likely to be vandalized,"

According to the University Gardens Web site, the gardens were established in 1877, and at their peak, housed more than 4,000 specimens representing 700 species of woody plants.

With the expansion of campus, the gardens had to be moved to the current spot, 1500 Denison Ave.

1500 Denison Ave.

Today, University Gardens is a horticulture display garden established as an educational resource and learning laboratory for K-State students and the visiting public.

University Gardens is not just used for educational purposes, though.

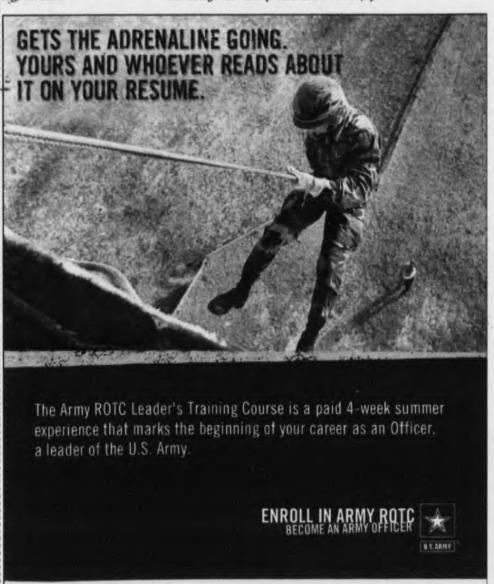

Several students also use the gardens as the location of their weddings, as well as other special events such as receptions, according to the site.

McElwain said he would like students to keep a watchful eye on the gardens to help protect what they are trying to build for everyone to enjoy.

"Campus thrives 24/7 with student activity, and I think that we have a wonderful student body that takes pride in being at K-State," McElwain said. "I feel it's important here to make sure that they are aware that things like this are happening on their campus.

"The KSU Gardens are free and open to the public and have been designed for everyone to enjoy."

Defense facility could give city economic boost

Officials visited Manhattan this week to look at its potential as the site of the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility.

Manhattan is one of 17 sites in the running for the NBAF. TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Although opinion.
state, city and university officials already have supported the construction of the facility Manhattan, some general concerns have begun to surface.

Some wonder how biohazardous materials would be dispensed safely and the overall safety of having both the NBAF and K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute located in Manhattan.

Waving these concerns away would be an imprudent response, but we believe having the NBAF in Manhattan is more likely to help the community than hurt it.

As far as the dispensation of biohazardous materials, officials do not seem to be worried about doing this safely, since the BRI labs already have worked with a high level of toxic agents.

Not only would Manhattan and K-State be able to boast two major institutes dedicated to security research and development, but a new national facility would create new jobs and provide an overall boost to the economy.

Officials have estimated the facility could generate more than 250 jobs and $3.5 billion in the next 20 years. This means more money for everyone, as well as a way to continue perfecting methods to keep citizens safe.

Overall, we see the opportunity to bring a national facility to Manhattan as a bonus for the community and K-State. The economic benefits, increased jobs and expansion of knowledge make this seem like the chance of a lifetime for the community.

And if they do build here, we hope they don't decide to move the facility to West Virginia after a year.

Separation anxiety

Despite good intentions, religious proponents shouldn't dictate policy

The United States is going to Hades in a handbasket. Crime rates are skyrocketing, in burning streets and the economy is plummeting before our very eyes. Fellow Americans, our nation is falling our very eyes.

Fellow Americans, our nation is falling apart, and I believe you know why.
We as a country families are failing,

babies are crying

have strayed progressively farther and farther away from the sheltering, rippling biceps of holy, beloved Zeus, and in doing so, we have greatly offended him. The turbulent times we now face are a direct result of our nation's wavering faith.

Those who would slander Zeus' name – subversive secularists who push for a further schism between church and state – wish to deny this country was founded by good, Zeusfearing men and women.

Often ignored is the recent survey featured in Greek Lore Weekly that clearly showed a vast majority of our nation – 98 percent, to be exact – believes in Zeus.

Considering every Zeus-fearing American peruses this respectable journal regularly, and we all are passionate beings compelled to fill out pertinent religious surveys, this statistic exposes the great disconnect between the laws of our land and the beliefs of its people.

It is wrong that Zeus' law is not more integrated into U.S. law. If so many of us are aware of the deeper truth of Zeus, we should not allow a bedraggled band of atheists and nay-sayers to eliminate his principles from our government.

Zeus teaches us a short man cannot have a tall wife, for it is wicked in his fiery, all-seeing eyes. Yet we still allow these sinful marriages to occur.

We are assured by Zeus's priests this new-fangled fad.of evolution is a cheap bid by desperate scientists to mask the truth. These so-called men of intelligence are the minions of Hades and wish only to cloud our vision of Olympus while lining their own pockets.

Those who know their Greek faith gladly will tell you we are not the product of simple, random events involving apes and genetics.

We were spawned from Chaos and his nothingness. Gaia, what we now call the earth, sprang from Chaos and then birthed the sky. She and the sky then went on to parent a yowling pack of titans, one of which fathered mighty Zeus.

I for one do not want my children learning the ridiculous lies of evolution. They should learn of Gaia and the children she had with her son in public schools, with as much respect as is afforded to any other subject.

These are but a few of the changes this country needs before it can be the great nation it was intended to be. We can change our laws to better please Zeus, and in doing so, better allow Zeus's illegitimate half-god son, George W. Bush, to lead us into victory against the titans themselves.

OK, so this is completely ridiculous. Obviously, Zeus is a remnant of mythology, and I doubt there even is a Greek Lore Weekly magazine.

However, I'd like you to imagine if you woke up tomorrow and everyone not only believed in Zeus, but the law demanded you follow his teachings.

Although the exaggerations in this column might not do the best job of reflecting it, I do respect the idea of Christianity and the potential it has in changing people's lives for the better.

But please understand that to someone who doesn't personally believe, the whole ideology really does sound like a beautiful fairy tale one that could impose its personal judgments in my life. Trust me, it's pretty unsettling.

Ilustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

Almost as unsettling as the idea that Bush could one day end up on Mount Olympus.

Piercings, tattoos becoming less taboo

We sat in a small, cold room

– just him and myself. My heart pounded as he approached with a small, sharp object. Closing my eyes in an attempt to lessen the pain, I prepared for the worst. Then, he put the stud in my nose, and – ta-da – my nose was pierced.

I pierced it last November, but it was something I had been dying to do since I was young. The only thing stopping me was my parents' threats and finger-wagging. Not feeling the need to be disowned from my family quite yet, I held off until I got to college and worked up the nerve.

It didn't hurt (much), and despite constant warnings of being considered "unemployable" and "trashy," I am proud to say I have two jobs and consider myself to be fairly non-trashy, thank you very much.

However, it did surprise me how many people thought a tiny diamond in my nose was such a faux pas. I fail to see the difference between the two holes I have in each ear and the one now in the front of my face.

For a long time, many people have viewed piercings and tattoos as the hallmarks of an unsavory individual – the kind of person who raises hell on motorcycles or throws beer bottles at police cars. I don't think I have done either, and I don't think most other individuals in my situation have, either.

I am from a small town in western Kansas, and the first time I went home with my pierced nose, every friend or family member I saw thought I was nuts, even old high school classmates.

Coming back to Manhattan, it was easy to see the difference.
On the more liberal side of the state, and a in college town, no one batted an eyelash. Many students have piercings and other bodily markings much more extreme than mine, and I respect that.

But it isn't just people in my age bracket. Doctors, teachers, business people – a growing number of individuals are getting pierced or tattooed, though not necessarily where it is so easily visible.

Even when visible, attitudes toward body marks are changing. I was happy to find the management at the new job I got last week will allow me to keep my piercing in while at work. As a contrast, my previous bosses thought it was the work of Satan, so I was excited to know rigid standards are loosening a bit.

Does a meaningful tattoo or expressive piercing really mean a person is "bad?" Of course not. It's just like wearing a necklace or ring, just more permanent. I didn't pierce my nose to be rebellious or different. I did it because I thought it was pretty, and still do.

I think it would be great to go even further. I would love to get a small tattoo someday, or pierce my tongue. It's going to become a way of life one of these days, and instead of whining about the "degeneration of our youth," nay-sayers might benefit from visiting a tattoo or piercing parlor and seeing the art and craftsmanship that goes into these creations.

The way I look at it, if I get tired of a hole in my nose, I can simply take it out – but I do not see that happening any time soon. The same goes for any other holes I decide to add.

Besides, what girl doesn't like, an excuse to buy more jewelry?

Athletes need to better represent their schools

THE DAILY REVEILLE (LSU)

BATON ROUGE, La. - Recent arrests on campus have stepped beyond the usual apprehension of a student smoking marijuana in the residence halls.

Three football players have been arrested over the past several days. Offensive lineman Zhamal Thomas and defensive back Troy Giddens were accused of breaking into a women's golf team member's apartment and stealing her wallet.

And offensive lineman Kyle Anderson was accused of fighting outside of Fred's Bar and Grill in Tigerland, leaving the victim in need of hospitalization.

These actions are not uncommon. The campus crime briefs, which print each Wednesday, show students and nonstudents often are arrested on campus.

But the recent arrests of Tiger football players draw more attention than the arrests of other students because football players serve as public faces for the university.

It is no secret the university is known more for its athletic programs than its academics.

But when our football players – who in large part are responsible for how the rest of the country views LSU – are arrested, the entire university suffers.

Many people hold athletes like football players to a higher standard because of the role they play at the university, and the athletic department needs to take swift and aggressive action against players who break the trators need to stress to athletes that they are different from other students because they are viewed under a national microscope, and when they sign with a team, they have a public role to play in addition to their role on the field.

Following Hurricane Katrina, every televised Tiger football game included footage of team members carrying boxes and working to assist the victims from New Orleans. The image of players helping the elderly and working with those facing the lowest times in their life was prolific.

With three arrests in one week, the positive legacy left by players during the 2005 season has been damaged.

Hopefully their legacy hasn't been marred to the point that the university is known as a place where the law is disregarded instead of a place where athletes are positive role models in the community.

Even if the actions of these three players are forgotten by state and national media outlets in the near future, they still are indicative of a significant problem in our athletic department.

When a large portion of the university's image is entrusted to student athletes, they need to fully recognize and accept responsibility before they are allowed to join any team.

Situations like these should never occur in the first place, but the athletic department needs to do its part and use these arrests as a learning opportunity for other athletes.

Anything less would be irresponsible.

New coffee shop to replace Chillie Willie's Ice Cream Parlor

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new coffee shop is slated to open in early June in the K-State Student Union.

Caribou Coffee will replace the site of Chillie Willie's Ice Cream Parlor on the second floor of the Union. This will be the third coffee shop in the Manhattan area to open within the last year.

Tina Griffin, food service director, said the new site will benefit both the students and the Union.

"It also gives students a place to hang out," Griffin said. "I think it will be a great addition with a different atmosphere. They are planning to include a fireplace and glass walls in the design."

Caribou Coffee, based in Minneapolis, Minn., has 464 locations in the United States.

Patrick Campion, director of regional marketing and merchandising for Caribou Coffee, said it is the second-largest coffee house in the United States, based on its number of locations.

"Our founders were inspired by a trip to Alaska, so we have a very warm, lodge feel," Campion said. "Most of our sites have a fireplace with soft leather seating. Our product is highly recognized as whole bean coffee, and we have won several national awards based on that."

Campion said Caribou Coffee employees realize a coffee shop might be one of the first stops in the morning, and they want the customers to get a warm feel. He also said Caribou is very excited about the good location the Union provides.

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union, said the planning for the Caribou Coffee addition has been a yearlong project by the Union Governing Board. Griffin said three players – Starbucks, Caribou Coffee and Radina's Coffeehouse & Bakery – were interested in the site.

"Coming down to the choice, Caribou was more flexible," Griffin said. "Caribou was flexible with working with Call Hall ice cream.

"Also, the Union will have its own blend of coffee with the Union brand on the outside (of the) cup."

She also said the menu will include non-caffeinated drinks, smoothies and Call Hall ice cream.

Even though Caribou Coffee might provide competition, Kevin Peirce, owner of Bluestem Bistro, said that did not concern him.

"In general, when some of the national companies come into town, one thing they do in the marketing efforts is actually increase the number of people in the market," he said. "A lot of people are used to drinking a regular cup of coffee, and other companies introduce people to various coffee drinks.

"I'm not worried. We are different, because all of our products are made in-house with flour from Kansas and honey and dairy (from) outside of Manhattan.

"National companies put preservatives in their product, so we have a much superior product."

Peirce also said competition is good, and keeps businesses strong.

Campion said the coffee industry as a whole is growing.

"The coffee industry states independent coffee shops grew 10 percent last year," Campion said. "This is great for local coffee shops, and there is room for everybody."

Steve Milligan, Starbucks manager at the east Dillon's location, said he was more worried about the new Starbucks than Caribou Coffee, because Starbucks offers a drive-thru.

Recruiters' targets still too young

Right now, there's probably a middle schooler playing ball with his friends on a playground somewhere in the United States. He's noticeably better than his peers. He dribbles with both hands, possesses a smooth jump shot and can even jump up and grab the rim with ease. The sad thing is, even though he's not finished growing and doesn't own a razor, there are scouts already drooling with anticipation at the thought of landing him on their Amateur Athletic Union team or at their university.

Welcome to the world of youth basketball. You see, it's not enough to just have fun while learning the game. These days, you're a late bloomer if you haven't been discovered, evaluated and ranked by the time you're a teenager.

But how early is too early to start searching for the next LeBron James or O.J. Mayo? AAU teams begin scouting players before they turn 10 years old. Though spotting the nation's top talent before anyone else can help an AAU team or university gain an advantage in landing blue-chippers, it also has the potential to blow up in the face of the team that recruits a player based on the faith that he will continue to develop.

Baylor is one of those teams taking a leap of faith and building toward the future - way, way in the future. Tuesday, Baylor received a verbal commitment from the second member of its 2010 recruiting class.

Perry Jones, a high-school freshman, committed to the Bears Tuesday. He joined fellow 2010 class member Jamison Sterns, who verbally agreed to play for Baylor Monday.

The Bears, who don't have any verbal commitments for the classes of 2008 or 2009, might be getting ahead of themselves. There is still plenty that could happen between now and the time Sterns and Jones log their first minutes in a college basketball game. They could get injured, get lazy, get exposed. There's no guarantee they will realize their full potential.

And as K-State fans learned from Michael Beasley, a verbal commitment is not a legally binding contract. Beasley initially gave his word to Charlotte before switching to K-State after Dalonte Hill, his friend and former coach, left the 49ers to join Bob Huggins' staff at K-State.

And as for Jones and Sterns, it seems it would be wise to hold off before deciding on a school. There's no reason for them to give a team their word right

Since Scott Drew took over Baylor's program in 2003, the Bears have not finished above .500 once. Although Drew has proven he can recruit, landing quality players even while the school was on probation, he won't keep his job if he can't produce wins.

It's troubling that basketball, even at the amateur level, has become a business. There's no reason why a kid who still isn't old enough to go to a PG-13 movie without a parent should be packing a gym full of grown men all hoping to recruit the child to play for their team.

Paintball team hopes to better 2006 performance, finish first at nationals

By Andy Nelson KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The sound of small arms fire shattered what had been a lazy Sunday afternoon. Two groups of armed men were seen firing at each other and then diving for cover behind what appeared to be inflatable multi-colored obstacles to avoid the returning fire from their opposition.

Rounds blanketed the sky and ricocheted off everything that stood upright. Those who were not fortunate enough to dodge the projectiles were covered with half-dollar sized paint blotches and were forced to leave the field of play.

Sunday, the K-State paintball team held its last practice before heading to the Dallas area for the National College Paintball Association's eighth-annual USA College Paintball National Championships this weekend. The team, which barely missed a championship trophy last year, is confident it will bring home the first-place hardware this time.

Reflecting on this season's success at other tournaments, Darran McEuen. the team's public relations representative, said he had no doubts about the team's chances of succeeding in the Lone Star State.

"Two weekends ago, we went up to Iowa, up in Council Bluffs. Nebraska was holding a tournament, and we pretty much steamrolled everybody at that event," McEuen said.

McEuen said he believed these recent successes put the team right back on track to be in the championship game this year.

The K-State paintball team was a thing of the past until McEuen, a fifthyear student in electrical engineering, came along and resurrected it his freshman year.

In a matter of only a few years, he not only had the team back on campus, but he also has it thriving. Team member Trapper Callender, junior in anthropology, said he came to K-State mainly to play on McEuen's resurgent Callender is not alone. McEuen said the team has no problem getting graduating high-school students from all over the state and also a couple from out of state to come and try out for the team.

Trapper Callender, junior in anthropology, shoots paintballs at opponents during a practice round Sunday afternoon at the Buckstal C paintball range.

McEuen will lead his teammates to Nationals where they will play in a round-robin style tournament against at least 27 other college teams from around the nation.

The tournament features five-minute rounds in which two teams go head-to-head in a scramble to collect the most points. A team can collect up to 100 points throughout the competition. Points are awarded for the

Wiley's homer leads K-State to victory

By Cedrique Flemming KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Byron Wiley was expecting to have Wednesday night off, but he was called upon to save the day for the K-State baseball team, and that's exactly what he did.

Wiley led off the seventh inning with a 350-foot blast over the rightfield wall that broke a 6-6 tie and propelled K-State to a 13-7 win over Central Christian College (McPherson, Kan.) Wednesday night at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Tigers jumped out to 6-2 lead after a five-run fifth inning. K-State plated one run in the bottom half of the fifth and added three in the sixth to tie the game at six before breaking it open in the seventh.

After flying out in his first plate appearance, Wiley sparked K-State's sixrun seventh inning with his homer.

"Yeah, I knew it was gone," Wiley said. "I hit it a mile in the air, but I knew I got enough of it for it to get out of the ballpark. It felt good to put us up one run right there, and I knew the guys behind me were going to come in and score some more runs for us."

The next four batters all reached base and scored, and senior Eli Rumler also crossed home plate before Central Christian finally was able to get out of the inning, trailing 12-6.

The Tigers (17-15) scored the leadoff hitter in the eighth but were unable to get any more help as the Wildcats (24-13) pulled off the 13-7 victory.

Fourteen pitchers were used in the game, eight by K-State and six by Central Christian. Sophomore Todd Vogel (2-0) pitched the seventh inning and struck out two batters to record the win for the Wildcats, and freshman Tyler Gilbert (0-1) took the loss for Central Christian after giving up Wiley's third home run of the season.

K-State coach Brad Hill said he was disappointed to use so many pitchers against the Tigers, but he was happy his team was able to get the win.

"That wasn't really what we had in mind," Hill said. "We really wanted to save Vogel, (sophomore Justin) Murray and (freshman A.J.) Morris. We were wanting to try and save some pitchers, but it didn't quite work out the way we had it planned."

Vogel, Murray, Morris and closer

Daniel Edwards each pitched an inning. Edwards closed out the game with three consecutive strikeouts in the

"They did their job, Hill said. "They came in and did what they were supposed to do."

After the first two K-State pitchers went virtually unscathed in the first four innings, freshmen Jason Linn and Nick Phillips nearly handed Central Christian the game. They combined to give up five runs in the fifth, allowing the Tigers to take a 6-2 advantage.

Luckily for the Wildcats, Gilbert and Tiger freshmen Jared Derusha and Jesse McKee one-upped them by giving up six runs.

Freshman Adam Muenster and sophomore Drew Biery each had three hits to lead K-State, and they combined for five runs scored and two RBI.

BAGHDAD - Suspected Sunni insurgents penetrated the Baghdad security net Wednesday, hitting Shiite targets with four bomb attacks that killed 183 people. It was the bloodiest day since the U.S. troop increase began nine weeks ago.

The most devastating blast struck the Sadriyah market as workers were leaving for the day, charring a lineup of minibuses that came to pick them up. The blast killed at least 127 people and wounded 148, including men who were rebuilding the market after a Feb. 3 bombing left 137 dead.

TO THE EDITOR

Women make more mature friends than 'girls'

Editor,

Megan Molitor's article
"Mean Girls" (April 12) does a grave injustice to women. To claim that women, as a gender, are dangerous and selfish friends is offensive and untrue.

Men and women alike have the ability to be thoughtful, kind, selfless, loyal beings. Of course, some choose not to take this path. My advice is to steer clear of these people – only you can choose with whom you spend your time.

The language used in this essay is the main source of my concern. Is labeling women as "she-devils" and "witchy girls" not an example of "women hurting other women"? Being categorized as either a "coldhearted witch" or a "nice girl" is a catch-22 women have dealt with for years – but to have a woman classify her fellow sisters as such worsens the problem.

Perhaps, had Ms. Molitor focused more on friendships of women, and less on friendships of girls, she would not have made the ludicrous claim: "Girls aren't interested in each other sheerly for friendship. They want competition and a way to meet more guys."

Maybe my confusion is because I identify myself as a woman, not a girl. In this stage of our lives, we no longer have the same concerns or attitudes as we did in junior high and high school.

This statement does not describe women. I don't think it even describes adolescent girls. Female friends are a support system – a source of camaraderie and laughter, stress alleviators, cheerleaders, and cohorts in life. We love each other. We definitely don't keep each other around to "meet more guys."

Hypocrisy distracts from moral accusations

Editor,

I find the column "Women have gone too 'wild" (April 18) very compelling and accurate of some women in today's society. However, I was left questioning the credibility of the columnist who wrote the article, Annette Lawless. In the article, women are criticized for their immoral actions of going "wild" by revealing their breasts and getting "frisky" on dance floors. I am not condoning such behavior, but I will not shame women who have done these things, unlike Lawless' judgmental comments.

In her column, Lawless condemns women who are "selling" their bodies for "cheap" to a digital camera, which leads me to my main question. How can Lawless make such judgments when she, herself, was posing in lingerie in her Facebook.com profile picture on the day the column was published?

This baffles me. How can a columnist write such a morally based column yet not live up to these standards herself?

I find it contradictory that Lawless has the audacity to point her finger at other women who are not respecting themselves when she is staging "lusty thrills" through her own pictures posted on the Internet.

So Annette, in your own words: shame on you.

Further research required on separate gods

Editor,

The copy of the Quran I got from the Imam at the Manhattan Mosque states in Surah 112, verse 3: "He begets not, nor is He begotten." Christians believe their God has a begotten Son, whom they call Jesus.

Also, please check Surah

9, verse 5 if you want to become better informed as to the nature of Allah. This verse is a far cry from the Judeo-Christian God's teaching in Leviticus 19:33 and 34. This theme is reiterated in Matthew 7:12.

In contrast, check out Surah 3, verse 28. I think this will clear up any lack of knowledge concerning the thought of "Different religions, the same God" by Kelsey Childress (April 11). But don't take my word for it.

All good journalists would surely do the research on their own.

MINI REVIEWS

Ted Leo & the Pharmacists "Living With the Living"

****

Album reviews by Mark Sibilla

Ted Leo is perhaps one of the last true punk musicians left in a world in which punk is equated with bands like Fall Out Boy and Panic! At the Disco. Leo has been a prominent force in the East Coast music scene, combining traditional punk and hardcore with folk, soul and reggae. Leo has proved to be a consistent and energetic songwriter, bringing to mind such artists as Elvis Costello, The Kinks and The Clash. "Living With the Living" is his most diverse record to date. Songs like the Irish-tinged, "A Bottle of Buckie" and the dub-influenced "The Unwanted Things" show Leo musically stretching his legs. The most powerful song is the brazen "Bomb.Repeat.Bomb," which is an in-your-face middle finger to not only the Iraq war, but also any war where great powers meddle where they have no concern.

00100 "Taiga"

In Japanese, "Taiga" means "big river." In Russian it means "forest." Both are apt descriptions of the dense music on the fifth album by Japanese experimental rock group OOIOO (pronounced "000-e-000"). Incorporating elements from all corners of world music, OOIOO creates a solid, powerful album. Yoshimi P-We leads OOIOO through its rhythmic explorations. The opening track, "UMA," contains a pounding drum cadence around which electronic noises, whistles and chanted, cheerleader-like vocals swirl and weave. The second track, "KMS," builds from a lilting guitar, hand percussion and a rubbery bass line before a wild drum break by Yoshimi shifts the track into a spacey, jazzy romp that continues to build. The band incorporates psychedelic rock ("ATS") and calypso ("GRS") into its sound. With its playful rhythms and incorporation of disparate styles of music, OO-IOO has created its most mature album to date.

The Besnard Lakes "The Besnard Lakes Are the Dark Horses" ****

If you can imagine "Pet Sounds"-era Beach Boys recording with "Dark Side of the Moon"-era Pink Floyd, and "On Fire"-era Galaxie 500 giving input, you could get a good idea of the sound of husband-and-wifeled band, The Besnard Lakes. The duo has created an album full of spacey, reverb-drenched songs with beautiful vocal harmonizations. The duo hails from Montreal, Quebec, which seems to be the current hotbed of indie rock (The Arcade Fire, Broken Social Scene, Wolf Parade, etc.), and it is certainly on par with its peers. There seem to be two competing dynamics throughout the album. Goreas tends to use crunchy power chords (especially in "Devastation"), while Lasek is more inclined to use lighter, more orchestral arrangements. The songs move at a deliberate pace, but they are never boring. Each track nicely flows into the next, and each song crescendos into a beautiful climax, creating an album full of majestic songs, excellent cohesion, and some of the most captivating and beautiful indie rock of the year.

Blake Aaron has been compared to John Mayer and Matt Wertz, but he doesn't mind.

The singer/songwriter said he hears influences in a lot of artists past and present.

"I think all artists get influences from others," he said.

Aaron, a Great Bend, Kan., native, cut his first studio album in January in Nashville. The album will be released May 1 on iTunes and other digital programs. Aaron performed Wednesday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard for the Union Program Council's Lunchtime Lounge.

Aaron said he began singing in church with his brothers and playing the drums at a young age. He said he also sang in school choirs, and during his senior year of high school took up the guitar.

He said he has enjoyed life on the road, calling it a new experience.

"Overall, it has been a really good response," he said. "It has been a lot of fun. I think this is a really good time for the acoustic scene."

Aaron said he always has wanted to play at K-State, and he happily accepted an offer from Brian Elliot, director of Chi Alpha Campus Ministries. Elliot said he has known Aaron for a while and had heard about his new album.

"I think he is great stylisticly and great acoustically," he said. "Not only that, but he also brings in an element of faith. His writing is more based on his relationships with people, and it is authentic."

Shea Olsen, graduate student in apparel and marketing and graduate adviser for UPC, said she enjoyed Aaron's performance.

"I really liked it," she said. "He has his own style. I really like that he is from Kansas."

Students in the audience said they liked Aaron's musical stylings.

"I really appreciate those people who stopped and listened to my music," he said. "I think that college students are more prone to accept new music, and I am from Kansas, so K-State was a good choice."

People likely to wait in line for sold-out bluegrass show

By Nicole Johnston KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A crowd likely will gather outside the Manhattan Arts Center tomorrow in hopes of getting tickets to hear The Wilders, a bluegrass band from Kansas City, Mo.

The sold-out show is part of the BirdHouse Acoustic Series, which brings acoustic artists to Manhattan, said Tess Purvis, director of marketing and programs for the arts center.

The maximum capacity of the arts center is 155 people. The show has been sold out since April 3, and Purvis said the arts center has been working to add more seating. The arts center set up a waiting list for people who want a chance to get tickets for the

"It's on a first-come firstserved basis," Purvis said of all the MAC's BirdHouse events. "We are working on getting new seating, so it's always good to be on the list."

She also said that in many cases, something comes up the night of the show for ticket holders, so they sell the tickets to someone on the waiting list. Tickets for the shows in the series are $16 for adults and $13 for students

Ryan Klataske, K-State alumnus, said his name is on the waiting list for tickets.

"I know it will be a great show," Klataske said. "I saw The Wilders for the first time at the Winfield Bluegrass Festival and thought they were amazing. They resurrect great old-time tunes with such vibrancy and energy."

Robbie Bear, booking agent for the BirdHouse Acoustic series, said the band was a favorite at the Winfield festival, and the previous agent recommended them for the series. He said despite its popularity, the band was not difficult to book.

"Artists love playing the MAC. It is a great venue with great sound and an awesome audience," Bear said. "Their music is foot-stomping, roofraising and just makes me happy listening to it."

Christie Murman, junior in landscape architecture, will be in the audience.

"I had to get tickets more than a month ago," Murman said. "I have no doubt that they will put on an amazing show. I hope Manhattan is ready for some hot bluegrass jamming."

Historical society dinner to feature presentation on record tornadoes

By Kristin Hodges KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A series of tornadoes that wrought destruction in northeastern Kansas more than a century ago will be the topic tomorrow evening at the Riley County Historical Society Dinner.

Bruce Jones, chief meteorologist for KSNT-TV, will talk about the May 17, 1896, tornadoes in his program, "A Tornado of Hellish Fury."

The 1896 tornadoes damaged the Kansas towns of Seneca, Oneida and Sabetha and was described as one of the most violent of the 19th century, according to www. tornadoproject.com.

The meeting will be at the Trinity Presbyterian Church, 1110 College Ave., with a dinner scheduled for 6:30 p.m. and the program at 7:15 p.m.

Virginia Quiring, Riley

County Historical Museum assistant, said today is the last day to reserve a seat for the dinner, although people can attend the program if they are not able to make a reservation for the dinner.

"It's an informational and social time for members of the historical society," she said.

The menu. includes smothered chicken breasts with mushroom sauce and couscous pilaf. The meal costs $11. The program is Quiring said the historical society chose the program featuring Jones because he has not been to a meeting before, and the topic of tornadoes is interesting, especially now, because one could occur during this time of year.

She said the society has quarterly meetings, and past programs have included information about the founding of the K-State chapter of Phi Beta Sigma and the history of the founding of Riley

"It is so that it is related to the history of Riley County," Quiring said. "And we always have a professional or someone knowledgeable about the topic."

Abortion opponents, proponents in Wichita debate recent Supreme Court ruling

By Roxana Hegeman THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA - Abortion opponents gathered outside a Wichita abortion clinic Wednesday to celebrate a Supreme Court ruling upholding a federal ban on a controversial abortion pro-

"Today the Roberts court opened the door for new prohibitions on abortions," said Troy Newman, president of Operation Rescue in Wichita. "This is a new day in the abortion battle. After 34 years of innocent children dying throughout the country, we now have a new court, led by Chief Justice John Roberts, that has a plan to end abortion in America."

But the ruling was met with disappointment by abortion rights supporters, who fear that without a health exception for the procedure, women's lives are at risk.

"Bush has clearly stacked the court," Julie Burkhart, director of ProKanDo, an abortion rights group, said of the Supreme Court ruling. "It is a sad

The nation's highest court ruled that the ban is constitutional despite not containing an exception that would allow the procedure if needed to preserve a woman's health, ruling the law need not give abortion doctors "unfettered choice in the course of their medical practice."

It was in Wichita where the Summer of Mercy 1991 protests, organized by Operation Rescue, drew thousands of anti-abortion activists for demonstrations marked by civil disobedience and mass arrests.

Wichita has been a high-profile target of anti-abortion protesters for decades because it is home to George Tiller, one of the few physicians in the country to perform late-term abortions. His Wichita clinic was bombed in 1985, and Tiller was shot in both arms by a protester

Lee Thompson, the attorney for Tiller, said he had not had a chance to read and digest the upreme Court opinion and at the Wichita clinic do not use the banned procedure.

Former Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline, an abortion opponent whose efforts to prosecute Tiller failed over a jurisdictional dispute, said the Supreme Court ruling will amount to a ban in Kansas on doing partial-birth abortions.

But he said Kansas clinics now do not perform such procedures as described under fed-

Kansas Purple Heart winner asks for 'a little faith' for Iraq war

By Katelynn Hasler KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bruce Dunlap is in his late 20s and has seen and done things he said will change him forever

He is a member of the Kansas National Guard.

During his nine-month service in Iraq, Dunlap suffered severe injuries when an explosive device hit the vehicle in which he was riding.

Bleeding from an arterial wound, Dunlap said he was clinically dead at the scene of the explosion before a shot of adrenaline and cardiopulmonary resuscitation revived him. Medics then flew him to a hospital in nearby Baghdad.

Dunlap said what happened is simply part of his job description.

"As a soldier, you are almost constantly in harm's way," he said. "It's just part of the job. You just have to handle things one day and one mission at a time."

Once stabilized, Dunlap was flown to the United States, where he has undergone surgeries and physical therapy at Walter Reed Army Medical Center for the last four months.

His injuries include broken bones in his arm, hand and knee; tissue damage; and the loss of parts of several digits. However, he said he hopes for a nearly complete recovery, thanks to the medical attention he has received.

In a ceremony on March 30, President Bush awarded Dunlap a Purple Heart for his service. He also was given a medal for good conduct and four medals for service in

"Reading the citations for the medal brings a few tears to my eyes," he said. "I think of all the fallen soldiers that gave their lives for the medal. I just gave a little bit for it, and maybe I can use that to continue to help other people through."

Dunlap graduated college in 2002. After graduation, he taught English as a second language to elementaryschool children in Taiwan. He joined the Kansas National Guard in 2004,

His stepmother, Leta Dunlap, said Bruce's family, which has a strong military history. was supportive of his decision to join the National Guard and hopeful about the opportunities it could provide.

"We were the most proud of his courage to face his mobilization and his duties without fear," she said. "He had a job to do and a mission to complete, and he never wavered."

Dunlap said he served a short tour in Italy before being deployed to Iraq. Even months of training can't prepare someone for the scene of war, he said.

"No amount of training can show you what it's like until vou're there," he said. "It's real-life war. You can never understand it without seeing it."

Dunlap's stepmother said she received e-mails and phone calls from him while he was in Iraq that showed his compassion for the Iraqi people.

"He would write to me saying how they're just normal people," she said. "He would always say they're just people - people who want to be able to go to their jobs, to go to worship and to send their children to school without fear. That's why he was so proud to be there - to make that happen."

After his time at Walter Reed, Dunlap returned home to Kansas City, Mo. Even after coming home, he said some memories of his service still haunt him.

"You look at everything differently afterward," he said. "It's as if a whole new world has opened up, and you can never close that door again once it's opened."

As a soldier, Dunlap said he was frustrated and saddened by the criticism of the war he has seen at home.

"It's easy to judge," he said. "But when you witness the Iraqis' situation firsthand, or when you hear a fellow soldier screaming next to you, it's different. It's just different. You understand what's really going on. We are accomplishing a lot of good things over there, and we are getting jobs done. People just need to have

House committee offers plan for deferred maintenance spending

By Carl Manning THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - The House Appropriations Committee announced a plan Wednesday to provide $152 million in the next budget year to deal with long-needed repairs at state universities, one day after Democratic Gov. Kathleen Sebelius asked lawmakers to spend nearly $63 million for such projects.

While most of the funding would come from state revenue, the plan calls for the six state universities and their surrounding communities to come up with some of the funds.

The proposal would provide for such goals as freeing up $15 million annually by repaying 1996 "Crumbling Classroom" bonds; allowing counties with state universities to impose a 0.10 cent sales tax for repairs; and repaying $20 million in Regents Research Bonds and shifting $10 million from that to deferred maintenance.

The House plan also would provide $300 million in lowinterest revolving loans for schools; require universities to retire old or obsolete buildings; and identify funding for future maintenance projects and operations of new buildings built with non-state funds.

Also, the regents would receive the interest earned on tuition and student fees to pay for maintenance. The proposal allowed for the creation of the Regents Deferred Maintenance Oversight Board to help keep tabs on the repair projects.

"I am very pleased we have developed a long-term solution that doesn't rely on one source of funding and will ensure our universities and community colleges are able to provide safe learning environments for Kansas students," said Chairwoman Rep. Sharon Schwartz, R-Washington.

She also said the oversight board will make sure Kansas tax dollars are used wisely.

House members will consider the plan when lawmakers return April 25 from their annual break

The Senate Ways and Means Committee has not released its maintenance proposal, but expects to do so in coming days. Any proposal likely will be worked out by House and Senate negotiators.

Sebelius spokeswoman Nicole Corcoran said the governor's office had not received a copy of the proposal. She noted, however, that some parts of the House plan are similar to what Sebelius proposed, including freeing up Crumbing Classrooms money, revolving loans and funding sources for maintenance of buildings constructed with nonstate dollars. Regents Chairman Nelson Galle, who met Wednesday with House Republicans, called the plan "a serious proposal" to address the projects. The regents have identified a backlog of $663 million in projects.

"While this proposal certainly represents an impressive and positive step forward, it does not provide an ultimate solution," Galle said.

He said the regents would continue to work with legislators to find a comprehensive funding proposal to take care of university needs.

Sebelius proposed spending nearly $63 million next year on university repairs, using existing revenues. The bulk would address the top campus priorities, with $15 million for unspecified projects.

Kukanich said the vigil was important to students because it allowed them to see another perspective of the massacre.

"All of a sudden, it's not so far away," he said. "There are connections to Virginia Tech everywhere. There are people who have been to Virginia Tech before."

Salazar said she thought the vigil provided a real-life perspective many students could not glean from TV.

Several students said they were supporting the students, faculty and Blacksburg, Va., residents because shootings like the one at Virginia Tech could happen at any university, including K-State.

"I think about the engineers that I know and what would happen if the shootings were here," said Sarah Crawford, sophomore in fine arts. "It really hits you. You've got to support them, because it could have been you."

Kelly Bennett, sophomore in family studies and human services, said even though many students at K-State do not know anyone at Virginia Tech, they still need to show the students in Blacksburg that other people care.

"I'm glad that we could go out and do this, because it shows solidarity and support for their situation," she said.

"One of the most important things is to stay in touch with those who are suffering, even if they are hundreds of miles away," Jones said. "It gives the students a way to stand hand in hand for their cause."

Mark Nelson, senior in philosophy, shared a poem he wrote in remembrance of those who lost their lives Monday morning. He said all the students who died were like the students at K-State. They were at college to get an education and earn a degree - a degree, he said, they will never have.

Nelson ended his poem with one request to students who graduate from K-State.

"As you walk across the stage, remember the souls lost at Virginia Tech," he said. "And when you walk, take 32 steps for those who will never graduate."

"It's simply because it's a procurement process, and we need to treat each of the sites and consortia with equal objectivity," Kelly said.

There had been 18 sites in consideration, but a site in Mississippi has since dropped out of the runnings, he said. "That was their call," Kelly said. "They decided to no longer pursue it."

The NBAF, if built here, would be constructed just north of Roberts Hall and southeast of the intersection of Denison and Kimball avenues.

The facility would house research on human and animal diseases and employ 250 to 500 scientists. It is expected to eventually replace the Plum Island Animal Disease Center, which performs research on maladies like foot-and-mouth

The Manhattan City Commission pledged on Feb. 6 to contribute up to $5 million toward the construction of the facility if the DHS chooses the city. The Kansas House and Senate also unanimously passed a concurrent resolution promising help if a Kansas site is picked.

K-State, city and state officials met on campus Feb. 9 to discuss plans to bring the NBAF here. Lt. Gov. Parkinson was at the meeting and told the group the Biosecurity Research Institute in Roberts Hall increases Kansas' chances of getting the new facility.

"We think that a major advantage for our proposal is to be able to say, 'Hey, you might not have your new building until 2015, but we've got a building right here that's available," he said at the meeting.

Minnesota students earn extra income by donating sperm

By Heather L. Mueller MINNESOTA DAILY (U. MINNESOTA)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. Six months ago, Johan Ashrafzadeh-Kian, senior in political science, began driving to Roseville, Minn., every week to donate sperm in a lab room.

While searching for a parttime job, Ashrafzadeh-Kian heard about sperm donation from a friend and decided to look into it.

After conducting some research online, he found very few donors were of Persian descent. Ashrafzadeh-Kian, who is half-Iranian, now makes $200 per month donating sperm at Cryogenic Laboratories, Inc.

"It only takes 10 minutes, one to two times a week, as compared to a 10- to 20hour-a-week part-time job,"

Baby photos, personality tests, personal essays, two generations worth of medical history, a full exam and several vials of sperm are part of the rigorous application process donors undergo before learning if they are ap-

Once the first testing is complete and the sperm are found to be healthy and viable, donors must sign a contract to donate 26 times within a six-month period.

At Cryogenic, the only sperm bank in the state, all donors receive the same pay rate - roughly $50 up front for a donation and another $50 after a six-month waiting period.

The donations are frozen for six months to allow for further testing for AIDS, HIV and other infectious diseases before they can be purchased by interested parties.

According to the American Society for Reproductive Medicine, donors are selected if the post-thaw semen contains a minimum of 20 to 30 million motile sperm per milliliter.

The donation process is like a typical visit to a doctor's office, Ashrafzadeh-Kian said. The reality of donating is far from teen movie depictions and stereotypes.

"It's like sex coupled with donating blood," he said of the small office rooms with a variety of visually arousing magazines. "But it's really not a sexual place. It's weird to think hundreds of other guys have masturbated in this Ashrafzadeh-Kian will receive approximately $2,000 after his six months of donation. Female egg donors can expect to receive an average of $5,000-$10,000.

Though it is unclear how many university students donate sperm, there is a demand and young, fertile college students are prime prospects.

Reproductive endocrinologist Theodore Nagel of the University Reproductive Medicine Center said though artificial insemination using donated sperm remains a viable and less expensive option for conception, new technologies for heterosexual couples have steered some away from sperm banks. Still, there has been an increase in usage by same-sex couples and single people in the past 10 years, he said.

"There will always be some need (for sperm donors)," Nagel said.

The use of donated sperm remains a relatively affordable - about $700 - and successful option with a 15-20 percent chance of conception per trial, whereas in vitro fertilization can cost $12,000 per cycle, Nagel said.

Rebecca Lang, freshman in English, said it is hard to predict how a donor will feel about being sought out by their children or wanting to find the children they fa-

"The idea that you can do something like (donating sperm) and think there will be no attachment or consequences isn't really congruent with how people end up feeling after a long period of time," she said.

Typically, couples can expect to pay about $200-$600 per insemination and up to $5,000 for "higher-grade" sperm collected by labs that tout donor characteristics like Ivy League graduates and Nobel Prize winners.

Sewing lets students create one-of-a-kind garments, save money

By Elise Podhajsky KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though sewing once was thought to be something only grandmother did, studies and statistics, sewing has become trés chic, according to recent news articles.

Macy Wendler, junior in apparel design, said she believes the heightened interest is partly because of America's obsession with fashion and shows like "Project Runway" and the Style Network.

Bernina Shoppe owner Lisa Lang also said the interest comes from retiring men and women who are looking for a hobby to help them unwind.

Chris Miller, sales representative for Weisner's Sew Unique, said she thinks people enjoy sewing for its relaxing benefits.

According to an article in the Pittsburgh Tribune Review, some studies have shown sewing can lower heart rate and decrease blood pressure.

Miller said she believes many people sew not only for its soothing results, but also because they can make handmade garments and avoid store-bought alterations.

Wendler agreed and said by having basic sewing skills, one can take an inexpensive, assembly-line item from stores like Forever 21 and tailor it or make it a one-of-akind piece.

"You can buy something that's just OK, and you can make it better for free," Wendler said. "It's a cheap alternative to buying really expensive clothes."

Even though she said a lot more people have told her how cool they think sewing is, Wendler said she thinks the high-cost of sewing machines inhibits a majority of college students from actually pursuing the hobby.

Yet, that hasn't stopped ev-

A 2005 Census Bureau report showed the number of sewing machines imported to the United States has doubled since 1999 to 2.8 million.

Lang said she definitely has seen an increase in her store's sewing-machine sales since she arrived at Bernina in June 2006. She also said the number of people enrolling in her store's sewing classes has almost doubled since then.

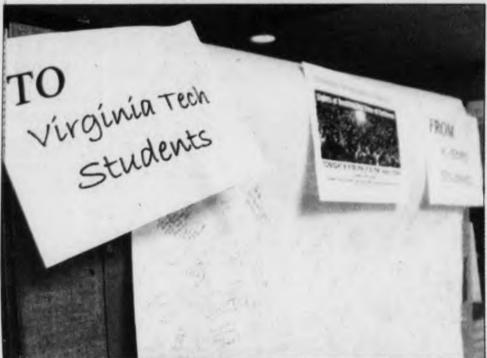

"Sewing is a relaxing and creative outlet," she said. "There's an (infinite) amount of projects you can do, and there's no rules - everybody about his hatred of the wealthy, Capus said.

Earlier in the day Wednesday, authorities disclosed that more than a year before the massacre, Cho was accused of stalking two women and was taken to a psychiatric hospital on a magistrate's orders because of fears he might be suicidal. He was later released with orders to undergo outpatient treatment.

The disclosure added to the list of warning signs that appeared before the student opened fire. Cho's twisted, violence-filled writings and sullen, vacant-eyed demeanor had disturbed professors and students so much he was removed from one English class and was repeatedly urged to get counsel-

In November and December 2005, two women complained to campus police that they had received calls and computer messages from Cho. but they considered the messages "annoying," not threatening, and neither pressed charges, Virginia Tech Police Chief Wendell Flinchum said.

Neither woman was among the victims in the massacre.

After the second stalking complaint, the university obtained a temporary detention order and took Cho away because an acquaintance reported he might be suicidal, authorities said.

On Dec. 13, 2005, a magistrate ordered Cho to undergo an evaluation at Carilion St. Albans, a private psychiatric hospital, after an initial evaluation found probable cause that Cho was a danger to himself or others as a result of mental ill-

The next day, according to court records, doctors at Carilion conducted further examination and a special justice, Paul M. Barnett, approved outpatient treatment.

A medical examination conducted Dec. 14 found that that Cho "does not acknowledge symptoms of a thought disorder. His insight and judgment are normal."

The court papers indicate that Barnett checked a box that said Cho "presents an imminent danger to himself as a result of mental illness." Barnett did not check the box that would indicate a danger to

It is unclear how long Cho stayed at Carilion, though court papers indicate he was free to leave as of Dec. 14. Virginia Tech spokesman Larry Hincker said Cho never took a leave of absence from school.

College students satisfy betting habits, make extra cash in poker tournaments, online games

By Brian Tosh

elebrity poker tournaments, high-profile sports tournaments and the rise of the Internet have made gambling easier and more popular than ever.

Eighty-eight percent of college students across the country participate in some form of gambling every year, according to a study from the Minnesota Gambling Problem Resource Center.

The study showed that most students use slot or poker machines. Playing the lottery came in second, and playing games at a casino, cards with friends and sports betting tied for third place.

K-State students gamble in a variety of ways. Some students choose to gamble among friends in the form of no-limit Texas Hold 'Em poker

"We normally play once or twice per week," said Morgan Lillich, junior in electronic journalism. "It normally costs $10 to buy in and $5 to re-buy."

Lillich said he views the game as a good opportunity to get together with friends and less as a means of serious gambling.

"We don't really advertise the game, so normally it's just my friends playing," he said. "But we've had up to 14 people playing before."

Lillich and several of his friends own chip sets and poker tables, so the group members typically take turns hosting the games.

"I've actually ended up winning several times," he said. "The most I ever won was $130 in a game with 12 people."

In addition to the opportunity to win money, Lillich said he has other reasons for playing poker.

"I started the weekly games because I thought it would be something fun for all of us to do," he said. "Instead of just sitting around and drinking, I thought we could sit around drinking while playing poker."

When friendly poker games don't offer the gambling experience college students want, they have the option of visiting five casinos in Kansas.

"The casino I go to most frequently is Prairie Band in Topeka," said Jared Hefley, senior in business management. "I usually go once or twice a month."

Hefley said he normally plays blackjack or roulette but recently started learning how to play craps, which has the best odds of winning. Most times, he said he goes to casinos with a group of friends.

"We honestly just go for fun," he said, "not to get rich."

Crisis committee discusses campus safety FAQs

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State already had numerous security measures and alert systems in place prior to Monday's shootings at Virginia Tech, a panel of faculty members said Thursday afternoon.

However, Virginia Tech's shootings brought additional awareness to procedures across K-State's campus. Because of the heightened awareness, members of the Crisis Management Committee had a panel discussion and FAQ session Thursday in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room.

Panel members mentioned K-State's Reverse 9-1-1 system, which was installed in 2005. The system, which is a joint effort between K-State Telecommunications and the campus police, dials hundreds of office and residence-hall front-desk phones in a 10-minute period in response to an emergency and to spread word or instructions around campus. Text messaging to cell phones in the event of a crisis situation also might soon be available for students, said Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life.

Members of the panel included Reed; Pat Bosco, dean of student life; Dr. Robert Tackett, Lafene Health Center medical director; Dr. Fred Newton, University Counseling Services director; Richard Herrman, K-State Police captain; and Derek Jackson, assistant of Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Herrman said campus police of-

Supreme Court passes partial-birth abortion ban

By Kendra Stiles
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Supreme Court narrowly decided Wednesday in favor of President Bush's Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, according to the Associated Press.

Introduced in 2003, the act has been debated upon by members of both parties and was considered by many, until Wednesday, to be unconstitutional. The Supreme Court's 5-4 vote is the first restriction of abortion since the historic Roe v. Wade case of 1973, which declared abortion a constitutional right.

Amanda Baxa, vice president of K-State's chapter of Students for the Right to Life, said she was glad members of the Supreme Court decided the way they did.

"I was pleased that they did vote for it, but I would have liked to have seen something more strict," said Baxa, junior in life sciences. "The bill they did vote for is not going to do much."

"The thing is, this is going to ban a specific type of abortion, but this isn't going to put an end to abortion in general."

Partial-birth abortion is a form of abortion that takes place late in the second trimester, according to the Associated Press. Federal appeals courts have ruled against the ban three times because the act does not include any exception for women who are at serious health risk because of pregnancy.

Angela Hubler, director of K-State's women's studies program, said she did not think the decision would have much of an immediate effect.

"I think it's less important in terms of immediate consequences," she said of the ban. "It's a fairly rare procedure, and it's not even performed in Kansas."

Hubler said she thought the decision would foreshadow what should be expected of the Supreme Court in the future.

"What this indicates is the new direction the Supreme Court will take on the abortion issue in the future," she said. "Justice Ruth Ginsburg articulates what that significance is, and it's that the court refuses to take previous court decisions into consideration."

In Ginsburg's dissent, she stated that the vote "cannot be understood as anything other than an effort to chip away a right declared again and again by this court, and with increasing comprehension of its centrality to women's lives."

Hubler said that her interpretation of what Ginsburg was really saying in her statement was, "This is an opportunity to attack the right of abortion, and the court has taken that opportunity."

Baxa said the court's decision most likely will open the floodgate of controversy surrounding abortion.

"I think this is going to bring out the debate again," she said. "It's definitely going to get people talking."

Theater gives students venue to perform black writers' works

By Austin Apple KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For 30 years, Ebony Theatre has given black students the opportunity to perform plays written by black playwrights. Finding acting parts for black students can be a difficult task, said Nathan Jackson, director of the Ebony Theatre and K-State alumnus.

"African-American students wanted more of a venue, so Ebony Theatre was started in 1977," he said.

years ago, he has seen about 40 members in the Ebony Theatre, he said.

Black students are not the only ones who can be involved in the theater. Jackson said students of many races have been in plays and worked with nearly every aspect of the productions.

The theater does more than allow black students to perform in plays, said Keenan Ramos, senior in theater.

Ramos, who became involved with Ebony Theatre because he knew Jackson from high school, said the theater is important to more than just 'Ebony Theatre just gives the Midwest some culture," he said, "It gives Aurican-American artists a voice that we would not normally have."

Jackson said the shows and readings, especially the latest ones, were performed to convey a positive message. Jackson said the messages meant a lot to the group members and the K-State community as a whole.

"You just do not see that too often," he said. "You do not normally get to see a different kind of theater."

Manhattan needs to hear a different voice from a venue like this one, Jackson said.

"Different viewpoints need to be heard, and I think that is why Ebony Theatre has lasted and has been such an impact on K-State."

College students' reactions to Virginia Tech tragedy show desensitization

Albert Einstein once said, "The world is a dangerous place, not because of those who do evil, but because of those who look on and do nothing."

I am constantly told that we are the complacent generation, the generation of narcissism, indecision and ambivalence. This was proven true when I heard the initial reactions of my peers to the shootings at Virginia Tech University. People were sad, yes, but surprised? Hardly.

The Virginia Tech shootings are an example of why this generation is so jaded. Cho Seung-Hui, a student at Virginia Tech, strolled into a hall on the VT campus and fired round after round into various classrooms with a stoic expression on his face. What choice do we, as young people, have in a world like this?

I heard about the Virginia Tech shootings at about 11 a.m. while I was in studio.

Naturally, I leaned over to my neighbor and told her that the largest mass school shooting in history had just occurred.

"Oh, how many died? Only 33? I thought that it would be more than that," she replied with an apathetic expression on her face. Most of my friends and people my age responded the same way.

Similar responses echoed throughout the Virginia Tech cam-

I am merely commenting on the way this generation has protected itself from the violent and the gruesome by detaching itself and acting blasé toward grisly acts of murder.

This way in which we proof meetings in secret corners of the world, attended by men with overly waxed handlebar moustaches and suspiciously hot women with Eastern European accents smoking from cigarette holders. We don't know what changes the former tax czar, Mark Everson, plans on dictating to the Red Cross - although we can comfortably say dictate.

This isn't a man who has flitted from running Wal-Mart to managing Target. This is not what you would call a "subtle career decision." We are discussing the man who reigned as generalissimo of the most despised bureaucracy in the country.

There is good reason to be worried on this appointment.

Though we are conned into double-thinking that the nation's tax collectors provide a "service," this is not akin to the service offered by Merry Maids or Phil's Phlowers. We are not necessarily at will to refuse these "services," as Uncle Sugar's hair-coated mongrels will happily pay us visits and remind us with long wooden sticks that "no, thanks," doesn't even rank as an option.

But, the burning question remains: do we wish these guerilla tactics of negotiation to become the trademark of what is ostensibly a charitable organization?

Some of us haven't attended every blood drive in the area with religious zeal, and I like to think such meetings are optional, but given the hound-like vigor in which Everson reputedly pursued tax evaders, the dark corners of my mind envision shadowy men herding me into steam-belching monstrosities to be juiced.

Further, given the IRS' tendencies for flowing rivers of paperwork written in language unreadable by mortals, I have grave worries that giving blood or donating money to the Red Cross will no longer become a deed so much as an epic event.

No one doubts that the IRS tax code is carved from the clammy bones of the dead. What astounds even the most steely is that the endless manuals and bizarre rituals comprise some 2,100 separate sections printed on more than 7,500 pages. We are, essentially, dependent on the charitable among us, who come to share their very lifeblood; accosting them with a mighty bazooka of paperwork at the gate might discourage the practice.

The very essence, the smiling, friendly, helpful nature we like to associate with the Red Cross seems to cry out when faced with trying to merge with the faceless bureaucracy of the IRS.

Giving blood should be a rather pleasant experience, a friendly bit of do-goodery through which we sanction our givers with dough-

Having worked for the federal government, these aren't the sort of things they specialize in.

We don't know when or if the procedure will change, but I am conjuring thoughts of blood drives with gigantic firearms, sharp metal poles and possibly a mop.

I should hope the country would question the choice of Everson to lead one of our largest charities. We've seen the effects of the federal government's goodwill in the past, and it traditionally involves more high explosives than we traditionally associate with the Red Cross.

We will not lobby for or against the legalization of marijuana, but we will consider the possibility of decriminalization. Many states have attempted to pass the decriminalization and failed; however, it still presents a larger issue. Should marijuana possession be punishable by one year in jail?

Countless crimes are being committed everyday in the United States. Should our prisons be filling up with those who got high once, > while others who committed more serious offenses roam free?

College students who are convicted of a drug offense are at risk of losing their financial aid. Life should not be over after getting caught getting high. Some could argue alcohol is just as dangerous and underage drinkers rarely go to jail, especially for a year.

The point is that violators of alcohol laws usually get a fine, revocation of driver's license or community service. Marijuana offenses should not be ignored, but they should not be punished too severely.

The money wasted on marijuana offenders could adequately be used in other areas, like education or social Letting people get away with smoking marijuana is not the issue. It's simply that the punishment should fit the crime.

EU MEMBERS ADOPT WATERED-DOWN RACISM, HATE-CRIME LAWS

LUXEMBOURG — European Union members agreed Thursday on watered-down rules for combatting racism and hate crimes across the 27-nation bloc, including setting jail sentences for those who deny or trivialize the Holocaust.

Critics warned that the bloc's pullback from a tougher 2001 proposal will not deter the racism, xenophobia and anti-Semitism that have been on the rise across Europe in recent years.

The rules set only minimum standards, diluting the original draft by allowing member states to opt out of the standards.

SUICIDE BOMBERS KILLS 42 IN IRAQ AMID HEAVY SECURITY PRESENCE

BAGHDAD - A suicide bomber killed 12 people Thursday in the latest in a wave of attacks that have shown the resilience of insurgents in the face of a, U.S.-led crackdown on major Violence in Iraq's capital.

The attack showed yet again the ability of insurgents to penetrate Baghdad's heavy security presence. The attack came a day after more than 230 people died in the worst mass killings since President Bush announced his plan to increase American troop levels in Iraq by 30,000.

GATES SAYS U.S. MILITARY COMMITMENT IN IRAQ IS NOT OPEN-ENDED

FALLUJAH, Iraq – Defense Secretary Robert Gates, on an unannounced trip, delivered a sharp message to Iraq's political leaders Thursday: The U.S. military's commitment to the war is not open-ended.

Gates said he will warn Iraqi officials that they must move faster on political reconciliation. "I know it's difficult, and clearly the attack on the council of representatives has made people nervous, but I think that it's very important that they bend every effort to getting this legislation done as quickly as possible."

TEHRAN, Iran - Iranian engineers began filling a new dam Thursday as archaeologists warned that its reservoir will flood newly discovered antiquities and could damage Iran's grandest site, the ancient Persian capital of Persepolis.

At the inauguration ceremony, pipes were opened for water to start flowing into an artificial lake created by the dam.

Iranian state-run television said the dam was opened "on the order of the President," Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, but the hard-line Iranian leader did not attend the inauguration.

TO THE EDITOR Different religions do have different gods

Editor,

There is a sad trend drifting through our culture. For some time, we as people have been leaving truth behind in our daily thinking. Truth, as it would seem, is no longer significant or important.

"Different religions, the same God," wrote Kelsey Childress (April 11). "Allah and the Lord of the Bible are one and the same." Doctrine and practice have been established and proclaimed for centuries, yet amazingly, Childress, in her 20-some years of wisdom, proclaims that it "all comes down to ignorance..."

Truth is what exists and takes place within and without a person regardless of emotion, opinion or perceived circumstance. If two things directly contradict, they cannot both be true. For example, Christianity claims that Jesus was crucified on a cross. Islam states that Jesus did not die on the cross (Surah 4:156-159). Are both true? The Christian God states that Jesus is His Son (Matthew 3:17). Allah of Islam claims emphatically that to declare Jesus to be God's son is blasphemy (Surah 9:30). Which of these is true?

I have several inter-faith friendships, and one thing on which my seriously Muslim friends and I can agree is that our two faiths lift up very different ideas of god. Two people may debate which flavor of jelly bean is better, but no debate exists regarding how many jelly beans are in the jar – there is only one answer. Likewise, we may debate which faith suits us better, but do not forget that only one (or none) can be true.

A 'quick fix' is not always the best solution

Editor,

I work for Housing and Dining Services as a custodian. My job is to remove trash from one of the dorms.

I find it hard to do my job when I have to dodge big potholes in the alley I have to take to get to the trash dumpster in the mornings.

I see that every time they (whoever it might be this week to fix the holes) come, they just put rocks in the holes to quick-fix them, and when it rains it all washes out, and I am left to dodge holes again.

Why can't they just fix the holes right in the first place and be done with it?

Release of Apple's 'Leopard' delayed

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Production of Apple's new iPhone has caused delay in the release of the new operating system, Leopard, according to the computer company's Web

Since iPhone, a sophisticated mobile device, will be shipped in June, Apple Inc. had to borrow software engineering resources from the team that was working on Leopard, according to a press release on Apple's Web site.

"We think it will be well worth the wait," according to the Web site. "Life often presents trade-offs, and in this case we're sure we've made 'the right ones."

Apple will release Leopard at the Worldwide Developer's Conference in June, but the system will have to be tested for quality, according to Apple.

"We now plan to show our developers a near final version of Leopard at the conference, give them a beta copy to take home so they can do their final testing, and ship the Leopard in October," according to the press release.

Employees of the K-State Student Union Computer Store said people have expressed interest in the new operating system and have been asking about it since December.

"People are anxious for the new operating system," said Drew Claassen, junior in marketing.

Claassen, a computer store employee, said he does not anticipate a decline in business because of the delay.

He said the market share for Apple Computers has grown at K-State, and he is already expecting hundreds of people to want Leopard.

"The last (operating system), Tiger, was a big release," he said. "Last time we had about 200 people. I expect twice that."

Apple released Tiger in 2005. The system had more than 200 new features, according to Apple's Web site.

One of Leopard's new features will be "time machine," which will back up everything on the Macintosh computer, according to the Apple Web site. With time machine, users can go back and look for files that have been deleted or lost.

There also will be newer versions of e-mail, iChat and Dashboard.

Are we concerned or just putting on a show?

Editor,

Media relies on what gets the most attention, and in the end the most money. Think I'm being cold? I'm just stating the obvious: Americans thrive on sensationalism.

First, groups popped up on Facebook.com or MySpace.com. Then texts. Is this for remembrance, or because everyone is doing it? I truly hope that remembrance has not become a fad.

On the same note, very soon after the tragedy, the remembrance ribbon for Virginia Tech began popping up online. Now all we need is magnets for our cars. Wal-Mart could start selling Virginia Tech merchandise, and Toby Keith could sing a song. By doing all this, does it make the tragedy any less horrible? Are we concerned with remembering, or letting others see us remember?

People began spending hours in front of the news. In a weird way, a competition began. Who can be the most upset by the events? Scared? Angry? Who can shed the most tears for the loss?

Four soldiers died in Iraq the same day, 62 soldiers already this month. Seventeen people died after a recent spring nor'easter. So why did this not gain as much attention? Why not the media hype? Because it is not tragic enough.

I strongly believe your hopes, and if you're religious, your prayers, should be with the friends, families and students.

However, the moment we allow this to go from a remembrance of loss to a celebration of mourning, the moment there's commercialization of tragedy by media, it ultimately trivializes the event and losses.

Shooting for the pros

Former Wildcat looks to earn spot on WNBA team Chicago Sky

By Cedrique Flemming KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Claire Coggins will be trying to accomplish something few K-State players before her have been able to achieve.

The former player for the K-State women's basketball team already joined 31 other Wildcats when she passed the 1,000-point mark for her career, and she finished 14th in school history with 1,236 career

Now she will look to join the elite company of former K-State greats such as Nicole Ohlde, Kendra Wecker and Megan Mahoney, as she has accepted an invitation to enter training camp with a WNBA franchise in hopes of making the 13-player roster.

Coggins sat watching the WNBA Draft April 4, but only because she knew and played against a lot of the women who were being called to the professional ranks and wanted to know where they would end up.

"It was interesting to me, but I really wasn't confident at all that I was going to get drafted," Coggins said. "I had no clue what was going to happen."

The three-round draft concluded, and, no surprise to Coggins, her name was not called.

All was not lost, however, because about an hour after the draft, the Chicago Sky, an expansion team last season, contacted K-State coach Deb Patterson. Patterson then contacted Coggins to let her know she had been invited to their training

"I had my fingers crossed that she would be available for us, and as soon as the draft was over she was the first player I called," said Sky coach and general manager Bo Overton, a former assistant coach at Oklahoma who actually tried to recruit Coggins to play for the Sooners. "We are excited about having her at camp, and we think she has a good chance of making the team. She is a good player who can shoot the ball with range, and I believe she is more athletic than people give her credit for."

Training camp will begin Sunday with about 16 players, and there will be two cuts before the start of the season. Overton said the first cut will be May 1, the day before the team's first preseason game against the Phoenix Mercury, and the final roster will be set before the Sky travel to New York to take on the Liberty on May 20.

Chicago might be a good fit for Coggins. The team struggled to a 5-29 record in its first year of existence, and no one has secured a spot for this year's roster.

"I couldn't have been asked to a better team to try out for," Coggins said. "They weren't necessarily one of the best teams in the WNBA last year. They're inexperienced as a team because they are an expansion team, so anything can happen with this franchise!

But the question remains, will Claire actually be able to make the jump to the WNBA?

Well, if you ask her, she'll tell you she's more than ready.

"A lot of the players on the team come from the Big 12, and (assistant coach) Stephanie White coached me at K-State my sophomore year," Coggins said. "I'm very excited to go see the girls that I've known and played against. It will be great competition for me."

Coggins' biggest strength probably is her competitive drive and her ability to extend defenses by shooting the ball from the outside. She said she also has the advantage of driving by defenders and getting to

BBO | Forbes values Yankees at more than 1 billion

NEW YORK - There's money in those pinstripes. The New York Yankees' value increased 17 percent in the past year to $1.2 billion, Forbes magazine said Thursday in its annual estimates of franchise worth.

The Florida Marlins, given the lowest value at $244 million, had the highest operating income at $43.3 million, according to the magazine.

"As usual, the franchise valuations and operating income numbers are pure fantasy and based on no correct information," said Marlins president David Samson. "To comment on such irresponsible journalism would only give it more credit than it deserves."

The magazine defended its article.

"Forbes compiles its annual valuations of Major League Baseball franchises based on information obtained from team executives, sports bankers, public documents, and other sources believed to be reliable," said spokeswoman Elizabeth Wasden. "We stand by our figures and the content published.

Despite the record evaluation for the Yankees, Forbes said they were the only ones to post an operating loss after revenue sharing last year. The magazine estimated the Yankees were $25.2 million in the red on operating revenue of $302 million, after revenue-sharing payments to the commissioner's office. The Yankees estimate their revenue-sharing bill for 2006 will be about $70 million

"I am gratified at the Forbes valuation of the Yankees," New York owner George Steinbrenner said in a statement. "We are continuing to build a worldwide brand for the people of New York and Yankee fans everywhere."

K-State closes regular season against ranked teams

Injuries were the story of last weekend, and unfortunately for K-State, that story is continuing this weekend.

Junior Fernanda Da Valle, who was injured in the third set of her singles match against Colorado on Saturday. might be out again. Fortunately for her, an MRI showed no damage to the anterior cruciate ligament, and most major injuries were ruled out.

"The news is positive so far but not complete," said coach Steve Bietau. "She's not ready to play yet, and she's not ready to practice, but some of the worst-case scenarios have been eliminated."

The other injured Wildcat, junior Olga Klimova, practiced Tuesday but Bietau said he will not know if she will compete until this weekend.

"It's one of those things where you just have to see how they do," he said. "It's really day-to-day right now. We're late in the season so the trouble she's having is the culmination of the continuous wear of the season."

This weekend's matches will be difficult, as the Wildcats (5-13, 3-6 Big 12 Conference) face a pair of ranked teams. No. 21 Texas A&M (17-5, 7-2 Big 12) will visit Manhattan on Saturday. Anna Lubinsky, who is ranked No. 24, and Elze Potgieter, who is ranked 113, lead the Aggies.

Sunday, No. 41 Texas (11-8, 8-1 Big 12) will visit Manhattan. No. 51 Vanja Corovic and No. 109 Courtney Zauft lead the Longhorns.

Despite difficult opponents, the focus of the team has not been on this weekend's matches.

"They're both very good," Bietau said. "Our business this weekend isn't going to have much to do with Texas A&M or Texas. It's going to have to do with what we can do."

Freshman Natasha Vieira played at No. 4 singles Sunday against Nebraska and came back from two tie-breakers to defeat Maria Ring. Vieira said she has learned everything she does on the

"There have been a lot of tough matches that were decided by two or three points," she said. "Every match counts. Every detail counts. In tennis, every point matters, so one point can make the difference."

When Da Valle was injured Saturday, it left a void in Sunday's No. 1 doubles team, a void eventually filled by sophomore Katerina Kudlackova, who paired with junior Viviana Yrureta. Kudlackova said she will do what she can for the team this weekend.

"We're playing two very tough teams," she said. "All we can do is go in and play as well as we can and try to win as many matches as possible."

Wildcats to be host to Sooners, determine Big 12 No. 6 team

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tied for sixth place in the Big 12 Conference, the Oklahoma (25-14, 5-7 Big 12) and K-State (24-13, 5-7) baseball teams battle this weekend to determine who rightfully belongs in the top half of the standings.

While many would expect a series between two evenly matched teams to be hotly contested, tonight's pitching matchup is likely to add even more kindling to the fire as it showcases two of the Big 12's top starting pitchers.

On the mound for K-State will be junior Brad Hutt, a pitcher who has been consistent in an otherwise shaky rotation. Despite dropping last week's game 5-3 at Oklahoma State, Hutt will enter tonight's showdown with a 6-2 record. He also boasts a 2.59 ERA in 59 innings pitched and has 36 strikeouts on the year.

Hutt's pitching counterpart will be Oklahoma sophomore Stephen Porlier, who was named the co-Big 12 pitcher of the week last week after a four-hit complete game shutout against Nebraska. Porlier has a 5-3 record on the season and an ERA of just 2.70. He also has more strikeouts (68) than innings pitched (63.1).

"That kid's really good," said coach

Brad Hill. "He'll throw any pitch any

Hill also said he was impressed with Porlier's ability to consistently throw all three of his pitches for strikes.

At the plate, it is difficult to find a weak link in either team's order.

The Sooners have five players batting at least .300 on the year and have recorded 96 extra-base hits. Junior Joe Dunigan is hitting .336 with six home runs this season.

Hill said Oklahoma's success came from its preparation and its ability to adapt.

"They adjust extremely well," he said. "For each pitcher we have, they'll have a plan for him. They're a multifaceted offensive team, which puts a lot of pressure on your defense."

For the Wildcats, the story is much the same. K-State has three players hitting at or above .300 and has no regular starters batting worse than 260. Sophomore Byron Wiley leads the team in batting average (.396) and home runs (3), but the Wildcats have been getting offensive production from just about every spot in the

The series starts at 6:30 p.m. tonight at Tointon Family Stadium. The other games will be at 2 p.m. Saturday and 1

PEOPLE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

International student adjusts to U.S. culture, pledges to fraternity

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the majority of students come to K-State immediately after high school, many students bring nontraditional experiences to Manhattan.

Tommy Han is older than most undergrads at age 27.

He came to K-State after spending the first 23 years of his life in his home country of South Korea. Pursuing a degree in management, Han is in his second year and anticipates a May 2009 graduation. Friends have said Tommy Han, despite age or nationality, is just one of the guys.

However, the transition did not come easily. After serving in the army, he studied engineering in Korea, and at the suggestion of his father, decided to study in the United States.

Now, he spends his days embracing the U.S. collegiate lifestyle. He likes rap music, particularly 50 Cent and Fabulous. Not embarrassed, he said he enjoys romantic movies but not tear-jerkers. Han also pledged and was initiated into a traditional fraternity, Phi Delta Theta, in the fall.

Q: Tell me about how the decision was made to continue your education in the U.S.

A: I was studying engineering, but I didn't fit in there. I was looking for another major. In Korea, it is hard to change a major, so my father said that I should go to America - get the wide experience - so I can learn about more cultures. It sounded like a good experience, my father decided, so I came here.

Q: How did you choose K-

A: I applied to Utah and K-State, but K-State sent me an application first, so I came here. Yeah, I knew about MIT, but I didn't know where a good place was or what is a good school, so I came here and studied.

Q: How do you feel now that

A: Now, I like K-State. There are cool people, and I like the fraternity. I've never had that before. Sometimes we have little troubles, but that is every-

Q: Last year you lived in Moore Hall. How was that? A: I really enjoyed life there, because there were many cool guys on the eighth floor who liked to party together. But sometimes, there were cultural problems. In my house, we had to take off shoes, so it was different. I missed Korean food, but I liked (living in Moore).

Q: What are some parts of American culture you enjoy?

A: In Korea, we had karaoke, like singing in a group when you drink. Here, there's more of the house party scene, but I like it more than the bars because I know people. Sometimes it's hard because I still am learning English. In Korea, we don't have a nice gym, so I love the rec center. If I want to go work out, they have nice basketballs and fields. Also, I like the K-State basketball team.

Q: What are some of the cultural problems you still face? A: I don't know about the high school or middle school life, so I can't join in some conversations. Sometimes, some guys watch "South Park" or "Jackass," and when they watch it, they talk about things I really don't know what they are talking about. It's not uncomfortable, but I was thinking, if I lived in America growing up, maybe I could join in.

Q: Tell me about high school in Korea.

A: High school was three years, and I think that its an important time of life, because after graduating we had to go to the university, so if we got into a good college, we could get a better job. It's a very important period of time in your life. When you go to school, you went at 7 in the morning, and we got out of class at 5. We have to study a lot, and when I was a senior, we had extra study hours. We got out of class at 10 p.m. We went 6 days a week. On Saturday, we got out at noon.

Q: Everyone has to serve in the Korean army, right?

A: Yes. Some people have physical problems, so they have to work in the government, like a desk job. Everyone else had to go - just guys not girls. I was 20 years old. I finished it when

Q: What are your plans after graduation? A: Maybe after I study, I will try to get a job in America, but I don't know. I will be done in 2009 spring semester. If I can have more chance for travel, I want to because a business major opens more, a big market.

Relay for Life hopes to raise $70,000

By Wendy Haun KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Relay For Life is trying to shake things up this year by raising more money and providing more entertainment than any previous relay.

Emily Frederick, co-chair of the planning committee, said this year's theme of "Relay-Stock" invites participants to dress up and participate in activities inspired by Woodstock, the rock festival held in New York in 1969. She said they also have several other activities that are typical for college relays

"We're having dance lessons offered by campus student groups," Frederick said. "We're trying to amp up the entertainment with different games, which is a change from in the past. There are going to be four different rock bands playing. We're also offering manicures and pedicures from Crum's Beauty School to the survivors that show up."

Frederick, senior in food science, has been involved in Relay for Life for six years, first as a team captain and then as a member of the planning committee for the past two years. She has traveled to national summits where she discussed planning the relay.

"The leader aspect of it always has challenges, but it's more rewarding," she said. "Being on the planning committee, I know about all of the struggles and successes involved in planning the event. "We're going to really see it all come together tomorrow."

The estimated turnout is approximately 500 people. Sixty-five teams signed up for the relay, up from 45 last year. However, if people decide at the last minute to participate, they can pay a $5 suggested donation and stay until midnight, said Angela Prewitt, community manager of income development for the High Plains division of the American Red

"This will have all of the typical elements of a Relay for Life," Prewitt said. "It's a 12hour overnight walk. There will be an opening ceremony with a survivor lap, as well as all kinds of activities and free food for teams that raise $100. All of the proceeds will go to the American Cancer Society to support research, education, advocacy and services."

There also will be a luminaria ceremony at 10 tonight. Luminarias are paper bags that have been decorated for cancer survivors or in memory of someone who has died from cancer. Candles will be placed in the bags and light the track

Relay for Life

The fund-raising goal for this year's Relay For Life was $60,000, although the leaders were hoping to surpass $70,000. Lisa Erikson, accounting chair for Relay for Life, said the current total (as of Tuesday night's meeting) was $47,892.88. However, Frederick said this probably will not be the total.

"We usually still have a bunch of money turned in the night of (the event)," she said. "There were some people unable to come in Tuesday

No matter how much money is raised, Frederick said she is always looking at the big pic-

"The most rewarding part isn't about seeing how much money we raise or seeing who's having the most fun," she said. "It's about seeing the K-State community come together and fight for this cause. It's rewarding to see bonding as a college community. Everyone's been willing to help and everyone's been touched by it."

Nickelodeon, greek organizations, zoo all to sponsor Manhattan Earth Day festivities

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Activities in City Park and Sunset Zoological Park on Sunday will teach participants how to take better care of the planet for Earth

Let's Just Play will give children the chance to hang out with their favorite characters from the Nickelodeon network. The day-long, outdoor event will take place at City Park.

According to a press release from Cox Media and Nickelodeon, the event will offer "resources that will result in a more active lifestyle among kids and teens."

Annie Timmons, senior in public relations, called the event a "long-term grassroots campaign to empower kids to engage in active, healthy and fun play."

"Nick Live," a Nickelodeon-themed game show, will feature the most popular characters from the network and will start the activities. Timmons also said the show will have an ending that is sure to please the children in the crowd.

"They are going to have what's called the 'Slimeulator," she said. "The last part of the game show will be a child picked from the crowd to be slimed!

After the first game show, stations with different games and activities will open.

Kappa Delta, a station sponsor, will offer two games: musical chairs and red light/green light. Other areas will have relays, broom hockey and a tug-ofwar game across a pool of slime, rather than water. Timmons also said a different local sorority - along with each sorority's respective homecoming partners will sponsor each of the 11 stations.

The activities will end around 6 p.m., after a second showing of the "Nick Live" game show.

In addition to the events in the park, Sunset Zoo is having events and exhibits with an Earth Day theme. The zoo will have booths and attractions to teach people about how to take better care of the environment.

"We will have a conservation carnival, a Go Green booth, and an Animal Ambassador program," said Rachel Soash, curator of education for the zoo.

The conservation carnival will feature ways that participants can improve where they live, Soash said. One area will allow visitors to make their own paper and another area will have butterfly farms available for construction.

The Go Green booth will offer steps that local business, schools and home can take to improve the world we live in, Soash said.

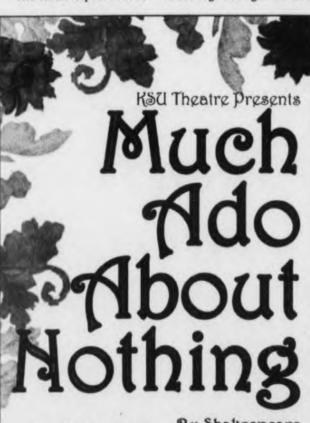

She also said the steps are simple and do not require much time or energy, making it easy to help the community.

"The Go Green movement is a community-wide event that anyone can participate in," Soash said.

She said an ambassador program, which shows people in the audience different animals that help the environment, also will be part of the festivities.

"Roaches will be discussed," Soash said. "Only 1 percent of the worlds roaches are in our homes and the other 99 percent help us out a great deal," she said.

Soash also said there will be a variety of other events to encourage responsibility in our environment.

Concealed-carry controversy ongoing after Va. Tech shootings

By Whitney Hodgin KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The issue of gun control has been discussed increasingly since the Virginia Tech University shootings earlier this week.

Gun-control supporters say stronger laws are needed, while gun-rights advocates argue the whole mess would have been prevented if the victims could shoot back. One option the latter group suggests is the concealed-carrying of firearms, an issue that has been substantial in Kansas for more than a year.

Concealed weapon permits have been available in Kansas since the start of the year. City governments state-wide reacted by banning concealed weapons from city-owned land. The Kansas Legislature then passed House Bill 2528, which would have taken away that power from local governments had Gov. Kathleen Sebelius not vetoed it.

The Kansas Legislature may override Sebelius' veto of the bill. Supporters of the bill think current laws are too variable across the state and it is too easy for permit holders to unknowingly commit a crime.

Sebelius said she vetoed hattan City Commission add-the bill because it allowed concealed guns at non-school youth athletic events like Little League, but she does not oppose a statewide policy.

"If it is in the interest of public safety to not have weapons at school-sponsored sporting events, it makes little sense to then prohibit local officials from banning guns at other sporting events," Sebelius said in a statement about the bill.

State law prohibits handguns at school sporting events and professional sporting events but not sports league events. Many cities have banned concealed weapons from city-owned venues.

Four-year permits to carry concealed weapons are available to Kansas residents 21 or older with no criminal background or history of mental illness or drug abuse. They also must complete an eighthour safety class and pay $150 for the permit.

The licenses are available under the Kansas Personal and Family Protection Act, which also allows property owners to make concealed weapons illegal on their property by posting signs at the ened several city properties to a list of more than 20 places in Kansas that do not allow concealed firearms, including city halls, municipal courts, and colleges.

Earlier this year, the Man-

Mayor pro tem Mark Hatesohl was the only commissioner to vote against the resolution, which he said would not stop criminals from obtaining and carrying guns and was too restrictive for law-abiding citizens who own guns for self-defense.

"We should continue allowing people to carry concealed weapons because it expands their ability to protect themselves and others," Hatesohl said.

He said mental health should be considered when changing laws on gun control, citing the mass murder that devastated Virginia Tech last Monday as an example of what could happen when a mentally unstable person is allowed to buy and own a

Cho Seung-Hui, the 23year-old student-turned-killer of 32 people on the Virginia Tech campus, was described by mental health professionals as an "imminent danger to himself because of mental illness" in December of 2005. according to CNN.

Signs are posted throughout campus saying weapons of any kind are prohibited. With the recent events at Virginia Tech University, supporters are saying anti-gun laws need to be stronger.

Despite the evaluation and other problem behavior he exhibited as a student at the college, Seung-Hui, who was taking the anti-depressant Prozac, legally purchased the two guns used in the shooting earlier this year.

This has lawmakers questioning the effectiveness of current gun laws.

"It's a matter of keeping guns out of the hands of crazy people," Hatesohl said. "We need to figure out some way to make them fit into society without relying on prescription drugs to change their mental state. The effort to alter people's behaviors sometimes alters their ability to determine right from wrong."

The Food and Drug Administration has been investigating whether Prozac and other anti-depressants actually heighten the symptoms of depression in some people.

Michael Weisbender, owner of Ole' Mike's Shooters Supply and Tackle, said no amount of anti-gun legislation will prevent situations like the Virginia Tech massacre.

What if one of the other students had had a gun when that kid started shooting?' said Weisbender, who has concealed-weapon permit. "They could have had a chance to defend them-

Organ jazz trio to perform blues-based jazz, swing at Manhattan Arts Center

By Hannah Blick KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The jazz trio Ken Lovern's OJT will perform as a part of the Swing City Jazz Concert series at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Wayne Goins, professor of jazz studies, invited the trio, Ken Lovern said.

Lovern said he finally got the opportunity to meet Goins when he last performed in the arts center a few years ago. The two had been communicating only through e-mail and phone calls, he said.

The two made a record and have been good friends since,

So when Goins contacted Lovern last fall and asked him to bring his musical talent back to Manhattan for a show at the arts center, Lovern agreed.

"I was really excited when Wayne called me," Lovern said.

"We always get great audiences in Manhattan. I love the atmosphere of the college town."

The group, Ken Lovern's OJT - "organ jazz trio" - comprises Lovern on the Hammond organ, Brian Baggett on the guitar, and Kevin Frazee on the drums, according to the group's Web site www.kenlovem.com. They formed in Kansas City, Kan., and have played together for several years.

The trio will perform its funky "swingin' organ jazz" on Saturday, Lovern said.

"We will be playing some blues-based jazz and some swing," Lovern said. "We are a unique trio because we play both our original work as well as some more modern songs people can relate to."

"Original tracks like 'OJT Theme' and 'Swirlies' show a good deal of compositional maturity, as well, and the group's cover of Michael Jackson's 'Billie Jean' is surprisingly cool, funky, and sophisticated," according to Keyboard Magazine's review of the band's self-titled compact disc. The group also has advertised its work through its Myspace.com page, www. myspace.com/kenlovernsojt. Visitors to the sites can sample the group's music and purchase its CD. The CD also is available at Claflin Books here in Manhattan, Lovern said.

"We're hoping for a good turnout this Saturday," he said. "Manhattan is a great town to play in."

ROTC cadets win Bataan Death March marathon, honor WWII soldiers taken captive

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many students spent spring break in exotic, luxurious locations, some K-State ROTC cadets challenged themselves in a place considered anything but luxurious.

In the desert of New Mexico, the K-State ROTC team won the Bataan Memorial Death March's light male military division, completing the 26.2-mile trek through the sands faster than any of the other 23 teams.

"It makes the pain go away," said Matt Cavanaugh, freshman in business administration. "It made it all worth it, winning it."

The Bataan Death March marathon traditionally takes place at the White Sand Missile Range just outside of Las Cruces, N.M., and it honors to wear boots, a long-sleeved the memory of soldiers who uniform and a camelback in defended the Philippines during World War II, many of whom were taken captive, and forced to walk from the town of Bataan to prisonerof-war camps.

Participants noted that honoring the memory of those soldiers was an important reason for competing in the march

What pushed us was seeing the veterans at both the start and finish of the race," said Adam Zerr, senior in management.

Despite having the same length as a standard marathon, the Bataan march included additional challenges that added to the race's difficulty

According to race regulations, each participant had the 80-degree desert sun.

"At that point, Kansas was going through a cold spell," said Jonathan McCully, senior in biochemistry. "Race day heated up pretty good. It doesn't seem real hot, but when you're out in the desert and not really used to it, it can really show an effect."

The course's terrain provided an additional challenge. Most of the race was run on dirt trails, while few portions included asphalt or sand. Also, changes in elevation during the race increased the difficulty, as the elevation rose nearly 1,500 feet over the course.

"The big hill spans two miles, and running up in the mountains kind of wears on you," McCully said. "In mile The winning team Kansas State ROTC-A Light 21, we ran through a pit of sand for a mile."

K-State's team began training at the beginning of the semester. Meeting on weekends, the crew completed sequential building runs, working up from eight miles to 18, the longest group run before the competition. McCully said the group also trained individually by lifting weights and running on off days.

Going into the competition, the group's confidence was high and its expectations were lofty, he said.

with the level of talent we had on our group, plus looking at past results, we felt that we had a good chance to medal or win, so that was our goal," McCully said.

Even if the group came out of the event with the gold medal, they could not escape some minor injuries. Cavanaugh said most problems came below the knees.

"Twenty-six miles hurts the feet," Cavanaugh said. "I've got a blister the size of a half dollar on my left foot, I lost one toenail, and one is still black."

Regardless of the physical demands endured during the march, McCully said that mental strength is what carried the group on toward the finish.

"It just takes will and de-"After our training and sire, and the mental strength to want to complete it," he said. "We had some mental breakdowns, and I felt like I couldn't go any further, but that's where the teamwork aspect came in."

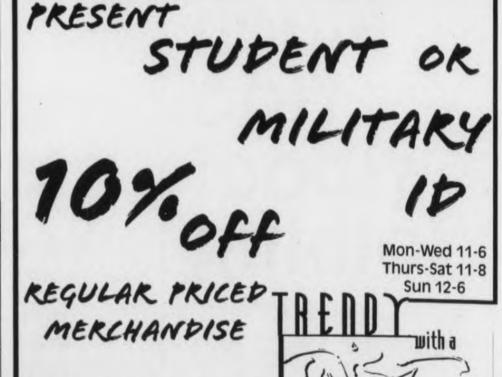

Cavanaugh said that he plans to compete with K-State ROTC in next year's death march, set for March 30, 2008. Even though Mc-Cully will graduate next month, he retains thoughts of competing as an individual sometime in the future.

"To run a race to honor the men who fell is just a great honor for me," McCully said. "That, and no matter how many times you run it, you learn something new about yourself and how far you can push and what being part of a team really means."

Oregon pledges to curb greenhouse gas emissions

By Linda Gerstenberger OREGON DAILY EMERALD (U. OREGON)

EUGENE, Ore. - The University of Oregon has joined other universities across the nation in the effort to combat global warming.

At the campus Earth Day celebration Wednesday, University President Dave Frohnmayer announced his inclusion in the American College and University Presidents Climate Commitment. In signing the commitment, Frohnmayer pledged to reduce and ultimately eliminate campus greenhouse gas emissions.

According to Frohnmayer, the document includes specifics for reducing the university's carbon footprint, which entail taking inventory of greenhouse gas emissions and developing an institutional action plan. It also includes time tables and mechanisms for tracking progress to ensure goals are met.

Though this new commitment is an important step in reducing the university's carbon dioxide emissions, Frohnmayer emphasized it is neither the first nor the only time the University has worked to become more environmentally friendly.

"Be proud that this isn't just a new project," Frohnmayer said. "This is something that, in some way, is part of the DNA of this very institution."

Frohnmayer said the United States' higher-education system plays an important role as a beacon of progress, both in the past by battling for free speech and civil rights, and by leading the way in environmentalism for the future.

"Higher education must place itself on the front line of the battle of its time," Frohnmayer said. "An overwhelming array of evidence has convinced many of us and many more all the time that the challenge of climate control and climate change must be our new front line"

He said that both the country and the world need to seriously consider the cost of shifting to an emissions-free energy system, and the process "must begin here and must begin now."

Second-year student Topher Vollmer was in the audience for Frohnmayer's speech.

"I support him," Vollmer said. "I think that it's important that as a campus we're involved in something like this. I think that a place like a college campus is a great place to start these grassroots movements."

University law professor Mary Wood, who preceded Frohnmayer on the podium, began with an urgent call to action.

"Suddenly and unexpectedly, the crisis is upon us," she said.

Wood cited melting polar ice caps and glaciers, warming oceans and thinning Brazilian forests transforming into savannahs.

Six million people around the world will face starvation, she said, according to recent U.N. findings.

Wood also said the American people have been "drugged by business as usual," and that collective action is needed in order to combat the problem.

"We must wake up our government officials. They should be convening task forces. Put them on your speed dial, email them, talk to them often," Wood said to the applause of the crowd.

After Wood and Frohnmayer spoke, Eugene, Ore., Mayor Kitty Piercy issued her climate challenge to the people of Eugene. She called for Eugeneans, university students and professors to log on to www. sustaineugene.com and do two things: "Find out how much carbon you're responsible for, and identify one new action each month you can commit to, and add it to your promise to reduce your carbon footprint."

Piercy asked all citizens to take simple steps like properly inflating car tires or conducting meetings by tele-conference to reduce their personal impact.

"I'm definitely going to check it out," said student Katherine Strother. "I'm not quite sure I will give up my car, but I'm willing to do the little things I can do to help."

Piercy also announced the formation of a new City of Eugene manager, commission and office of sustainability. The commission and the office will work together with the city council to develop a new plan to reduce city emissions, said Piercy.

She also spoke to the urgency of combating global warming and encouraged citizens to go to the Web site today.

"This process will take time, but we don't really have a lot of time," she said.

Study says Duke's 'hook-up culture' not as prevalent as students think

By Lucie Zhang
THE CHRONICLE (DUKE)

DURHAM, N.C. – Stories of Duke University's alleged hook-up culture made national news during the past year, but a recent study by the American College Health Association has shown that Duke students aren't as promiscuous as they think they are.

The 2006 edition of the annual National College Health Assessment, the ACHA found that 33 percent of Duke students said they have not been sexually active in the last 12 months.

The study found also that 47 percent of the student body said they had just one sexual partner, and only 10 percent said they had two.

Yet when asked to predict what they thought the actual statistics would be, students said they believed only 2.5 percent of the student body was not sexually active, 19 percent had one partner and 33 percent had two.

The difference between the statistics reflects the misconception among students that "everyone 'hooks up'" and that everyone has multiple partners, said Franca Alphin, director of health promotions at the Duke Student Health Center.

Sophomore Sarah Doyle, however, said Duke's hook-up culture thrives at the expense of its dating culture.

"Nobody that I know of actually goes out on dates, and if they do, it's very unusual," she said. "More people just kind of meet up with people when they're already out, like at bars, or restaurants or parties. It's usually very flattering as a girl to be asked out on a date, because it usually doesn't happen very often."

In an effort to promote dating among the student body, freshman Lucy McKinstry helped create the Facebook .com group "We're bringing the date back!" The group boasts 377 members.

"People want to date," McKinstry said. "I've been really surprised at how many people have joined and how many different kinds of people.
I feel like it's really crossed all sorts of social lines. It's something that everyone can kind of agree on."

Health education specialist Lindsey Bickers Bock said this phenomenon is not unique to Duke. Yet Duke's campus culture still places an unbalanced amount of social pressure on its female students, Doyle said.

"I wouldn't necessarily say that Duke is any different than any other college campus," she said. "But in general, I feel like it's usually expected that more than just making out is part of hooking up. As a woman, it can be kind of degrading on Duke's campus because you're expected to put out so much, and if you don't, then it's almost like the interest is lost."

Of those sexually active, the NCHA survey found that 40 percent of students said they have never used a condom during oral sex. Alphin said that this statistic is a cause for concern, especially since less than 1 percent said they always used a condom during oral sex.

But Doyle said most students generally consider their sexual health important. She added that the responsibility for getting condoms normally falls on men, while the responsibility of taking birth control pills rests on women.

Sophomore Daniel Harvey, member of Duke Educational Leaders in Sexual Health, said he wished students were aware of the services Duke provides for sexual health, such as free condoms, contraceptives and STD testing. Still, protection itself could lead to misconceptions, Bickers Bock said.

"I think, not just at Duke, that in American culture, how prepared and educated someone is about their sexual health, people extrapolate that to what their experiences have been," she said. "So, if somebody knows a lot about sexual health, is that because they've been sexually active with a lot of people? Because somebody is carrying condoms, does that mean that they assume that they're going to be sexually active tonight?"

Bickers Bock added that the overall culture has created different gender characterizations for men and women.

"That's where you get terms like 'slut' and 'pimp," she said. "Those having different connotations is part of a larger culture."

Bickers Bock said for sexually active students, sexual health is a personal responsibility.

"It's not like people make a one-time decision, and they're going to say, 'I'm going to be sexually healthy or not," she said. "Instead, it's a lot of individual decisions and people figuring out what's right for them."

Swastika found on Jewish fraternity house

By Rossilynne Skena

DAILY COLLEGIAN (PENN STATE)

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. – Pennsylvania State University Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity members awoke yesterday morning to find a black swastika spray-painted on the back of their fraternity house.

Fraternity members said police arrived at about 2 p.m. yesterday at the house, 240 E. Prospect Ave.

Alpha Epsilon Pi is a national Jewish fraternity. At Penn State, Alpha Epsilon Pi has both Jewish and non-lewish members. "It bothers us all," said member Josh Goodkin, sophomore in accounting.

The graffiti was painted two days after Holocaust Remembrance Day.

"We want to send a message to the university community that we won't tolerate it," Goodkin said. Penn State Hillel Executive Director Tuvia Abramson called the vandalism "revolting" and "shameful."

"It is a hate crime. It is unacceptable," he said. "It does not happen often in our community, and we are lucky in it. But the reality is that two days after the Holocaust Memorial Day, a sick person will go and put a swastika on a building that is a mostly Jewish fraternity."

The fraternity has not begun removing the swastika, part of which is drawn backward.

"We're in the process of removing it," Alpha Epsilon Phi President Jared Smith, junior in journalism, said.

Abramsom said he is "shocked" but "not surprised" by the incident.

"There is a lot of teaching to do, and the hate did not end yet" he said

The minimum bet for the table games is $5 at most casinos. Hefley said he normally does not bet more than the minimum, but he still has managed to win substantial amounts on several occasions.

"I've won $250 in a night at Kansas casinos," he said. "In Vegas, I've won several thousand. After winning big, I usually just walk away."

Gambling responsibly rests on the individual, Hefley said. He said he tries to play to have fun and leaves emotion out of the game.

"I think casinos can be fun if you have discipline," he said. "You have to decide how much you can lose and then walk away when that's gone. People get in trouble when they keep going back to the ATM."

Other K-State students choose to do their gambling online. Online poker began in 1998 with the launch of the Planet Poker Web site, according to the CBS News Web site. Since then, it has grown into a multi-billion dollar industry.

Among males 18 to 22, online gambling doubled in the past year, according to a report by the Annenberg Public Policy Center at the University of Pennsylvania. More than 20 percent of college students gamble online at least once a month, according to the report.

Bobby Curiel, fifth-year student in political science, said he plays through the Web site www.fulltiltpoker.net.

"I started playing a few years ago," Curiel said. "At first, I wasn't playing for money, but eventually I decided to throw down $25."

After winning several times, Curiel realized he enjoyed the online play and spent about $25 a month for the next 8 "I started winning $5 tournaments that typically had a $200 to $500 prize, depending on how many people were playing," he said. "This allowed me to start bankrolling bigger tournaments."

Most online poker sites offer tournament play ranging from $5 to several hundred dollars for the buy-in.

"The biggest tournament I ever won had 29 other people and a $100 buy-in," Curiel said. "I won $1,900, which ended up covering my entire spring break trip to Vegas."

He said online poker games often take a long time because of the number of people that can play in a single tournament with 200 people, it can take several hours, but for a tournament with 2,500 people it takes closer to six hours," Curiel said. "At one point, I was playing around 10 hours a week, but I've since cut back."

"For a multi-table tourna-

College sports are known for their enthusiastic and knowledgeable fans, but some students take their interest further than just watching games. Sports betting gives these individuals an outlet to demonstrate their knowledge while potentially making money.

Aaron Dubin, senior in milling science and management, said he began consistently placing bets as a sophomore in high school and was already taking bets on the Super Bowl by his senior year.

"Betting on sports is something I've enjoyed for a long time now," Dubin said. "My first bookie in high school was my friend's older brother."

Today he places his bets on either www.sportsbook.com or www.betcris.com. The sites will accept bets ranging from virtually any sporting event to when suspected gay celebrities will come out of the closet.

With the NBA playoffs approaching, Dubin said he is anticipating placing a lot of bets, but he already has been involved heavily in betting on college basketball, football and NFL games in the past year.

"During college basketball season, I would place bets on all five of the Ivy League games on Fridays," he said. "On Saturdays, I usually bet on about 25 percent of the games for the day."

Betting so frequently, Dubin often finds that he needs to move around large amounts of money.

"For college basketball, I will throw down anything from $200 to $1,500 for all the games on a Saturday," he said. "For games on Mondays or Tuesdays, I might go up to around $2,000."

Depending on the bets he places, Dubin said he often can see a sharp increase or decline in his finances.

"The most money I ever made in a day was $850 on a Saturday, but I once made $550 on a single Chiefs game," he said. "When West Virginia upset No. 5-ranked Pittsburg, I lost $300 and went immediately to the bars."

ately to the bars."

Despite the volatile nature of his finances while betting, Dubin said he has no intention of scaling back his hob-

"It's really a roller coaster ride for me, and depending how much I'm up or down decides the frequency with which I bet," he said. "This is what I do for entertainment, and over time I've gotten good at it."

Although Dubin has accumulated debt in the past, he said he typically tries to never be more than $300 in the hole.

"I'm fortunate that I've always managed to work out my debt," Dubin said. "The secret really is to know when to stop and take a break before things really get out of hand."

The committee meets six times a year to discuss psychological, medical and student-safety crises, according to the student life crisis assistance Web site.

"I think since every situation is unique, we have to really quickly come together to say what are the conditions, what are the resources and where do we go," Newton said.

SafeZone training is another resource available to students, Newton said. The training covers listening skills, referral and crisis intervention, according to the SafeZone Web site.

After Monday's shooting at Virginia Tech, Melissa Taylor, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, said her parents are concerned about her because she is an out-of-state student who is more than 12 hours away from her hometown of Houston.

Taylor said she also attended the discussion because she works for New Student Services and needs to provide safety information for potential and incoming K-State students.

Additionally, Taylor said she will try to learn more about SafeZone training programs.

"I'm highly impressed with it," she said. "It's something I plan to look more into, and I encourage other students to do the same."

Committee addresses deferred maintenance

By Carl Manning
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – A Senate committee on Thursday endorsed spending $525 million over five years, including $93.5 million in the next budget year, to address long-delayed maintenance at state universities.

"It's a major step in the right direction of dealing with the significant needs of deferred maintenance," said Dwayne Umbarger, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

"This has been going on without proper levels of funding for the last 10 to 15 years."

Umbarger, R-Thayer, said the proposal is a compilation of ideas from various sources, including a Senate task force, House legislation and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

"It's a sincere step in addressing maintenance issues and take into consideration other state needs," he said.

Nelson Galle, chairman of the state Board of Regents, which oversees the state's higher education system, praised the committee's action. The regents have identified a backlog of $663 million worth of projects for the universities.

"The Senate plan represents a substantial and creative solution to an extremely challenging issue," said Galle, of Manhattan. "The board looks forward to working with state legislators in the coming days to ultimately arrive at a meaningful funding solution."

Legislators return Wednesday after their annual break to wrap up remaining business, including passing a final budget bill that includes funding for university repairs. The issue has been discussed and debated since January, but nothing has happened.

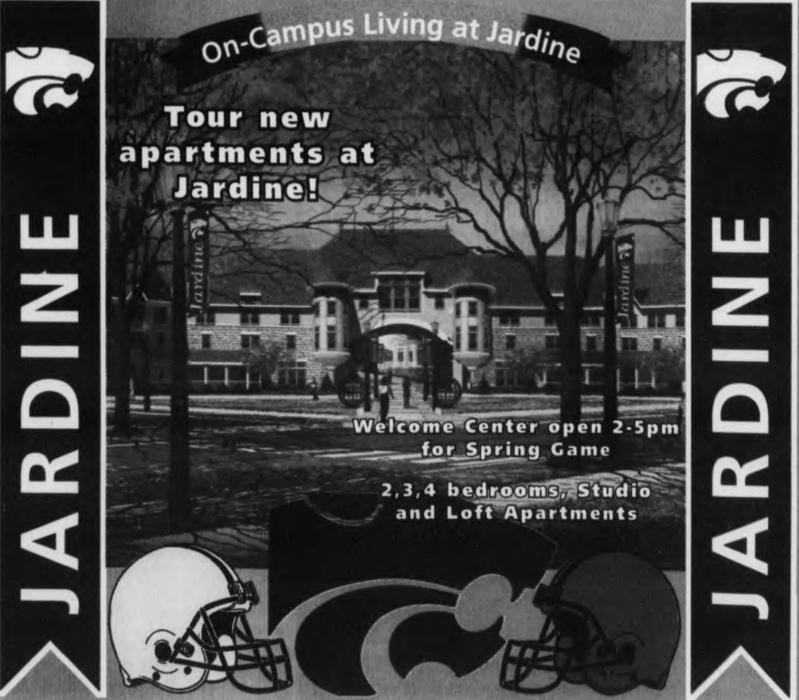

The final version of a maintenance plan will be worked out by House and Senate budget negotiators, though Umbarger said, "If not this plan, then let me see yours."

He said that of the $525 million, $450 million will be state dollars, while $50 million of the $93.5 million for the budget year beginning July 1 will be state revenue.

An additional $15 million would be freed up by paying off the 1996 "Crumbling Classroom" bonds – the last major legislative effort to deal with university repairs.

All ages, classes members of 'marijuana culture'

By Mike Kelly KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Editor's note: The name of the student profiled in this story has been changed to protect his iden-rowing up in rural Texas was like living in a bubble for John Smith. All fears and uncertainties were a world away, and townspeople seemed to focus inward.

"Eighty percent of the people in my town worked for the chemical company, so everyone is relatively close," John said. "It's gossip city. My mom knows about things before I do.'

Smith could be considered the typical college student. An engineering student, he earns good grades and remains involved on campus while holding a part-time job. His parents, married for more than 20 years, still live together with his little brother. It is no surprise Smith had a good childhood and what he considers to be a good life.

What might be surprising is that he is also an avid user of marijuana.

"I just like doing it," he said. "I like what it does for me, and I don't think it's a problem for anyone else."

A study conducted by the University of Albany estimates that nearly $6 billion is spent on marijuana in the United States each year. Although these numbers are inflated with trafficking costs and underground sales, many still consider it an eyebrow-raising statistic.

"The marijuana crowd has its own culture," Smith said. "We have our own music," we have our own comedians, our own Web sites, our own stores. You can't deny the fact that so many Americans are doing it. The country would not be the same without it."

Smith said he remembers the first time he used marijuana like it was yesterday.

"It was freshman year of high school at what's called the 'Bell Dance," he said. "It was one of those where girls pay for everything, so my friends and I took a limo bus to Houston.

"After the dance, we went back to one of our girlfriends' houses. My buddy David and I went back behind a garage, and we smoked out of a Dr Pepper can. I didn't cough the first time. It was kind of weird."

Smith leans back in an oversized blue sofa with his legs crossed. His room is lit by a tall standing lamp and neon-blue lights from the compact-disc player. A mix of posters adorns the walls, including Frank Sinatra and the Rat Pack, Muhammad Ali and the Dave Matthews Band.

A small, three-inch, blown-glass pipe sits on a coffee table next to remnants of the green, delicate marijuana plant. Smith takes a puff from a Camel Turkish Silver and continues.

"People sometimes say that you don't get high the first time you smoke," he said. "Bullshit. I didn't know what to expect, because I had never done it. People would say 'Oh, I got stoned,' whatever. I didn't know what I was looking for or how I was supposed to feel or what I was supposed to do, and then it hit me like a brick wall in the face - things were different, and I knew I was high."

For Smith, using marijuana has been a social activity since he was 15. He said his friends might have played a role in the beginning, but ultimately, he made a conscious choice to experiment.

"My friends offered it to me, they gave me the opportunity, but ultimately it was my decision," he said. "Up until trying it, they were the only knowledge of smoking weed that I had.

"But I'm a guy who likes new things. I like new experiences. I like to buy new things. I love new clothes, just new things in general. I want to know everything there is to possibly know in the world."

Smith is dressed nicely, not the way one might think a marijuana user would dress. He wears brand-new, brown Nike street shoes, designer jeans, a gray, slightly worn hooded sweatshirt, a beanie and his custom-framed reading glasses.

He sits back comfortably, smiling to himself.

"I guarantee you, if you put me in a lineup with 10 other random college students, I wouldn't be the one who you think does drugs.

Asked why so many people, including the government, continue to look unkindly on the drug, Smith said ignorance is a defining factor.

"People think of weed, and they think potheads," he said. "They think of those people who sit on the couch all day long and do nothing, but they don't realize pot is just something you can do for a leisurely time. You can go on about your daily business."

Being a part of the marijuana culture during the past six years, Smith has smoked marijuana with people ranging in ages from 14 to 60. He said marijuana is present in every age group and every economic level of the country.

"If I had to guess, I would say that probably about 45 percent of Americans have tried marijuana or use it socially," he said. "In college, that number is probably around 65 to 70."

When asked about the future, Smith said he will continue to use marijuana but adamantly stated he is not addicted, having quit successfully in the past. Though he said the marijuana culture can be consuming at times, he would not change where he is in life now.

"I don't think I have any regrets," he said. "I think I've learned a lot, and I like to learn, whether it be something I want to change or something

Luke Wilson takes on more serious role in horror film 'Vacancy' involving snuff films, dirty motels

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the new movie "Vacancy," Luke Wilson acts in a genre that, until recently, was foreign to him. He said he always was a fan of horror movies but never thought he'd get the chance to act in one. Wilson said he expressed hesitation when looking at the script but eventually took the movie for the experience.

'This is not the kind of movie that comes my way often," Wilson said. He said he always has been a fan of horror movies but never thought he would get the chance to act in one.

"Vacancy" is the story of a husband and wife who check into a motel at the end of a long day of traveling. After they reach their room, the guests discover that the motel owners use their business to make snuff films. The movie shows the couples' escape from the motel. To promote his new film, Wilson participated in a teleconference with college journalists, answering questions about everything from acting with his brothers to landscaping.

Q: If you weren't an actor, what would you be doing?

A: Well, growing up, the things that kind of interested me were photography and the newspaper business and movies, just kind of reading about movies or reading about actors and directors. But the job that I was always doing was landscaping. I had just some nies where they'd do houses and commercial stuff.

friends who ran landscaping compa-

Q: What's it like working with your brother, specifically Owen? Which would you rather work with, Owen or Andrew?

A: I like working with them both equally, but it's interesting to work with Owen. He's one of those guys that, being a writer and kind of being wired the way he is on every movie, he kind of completely rewrites and overhauls characters in a good way.

He's who I did my first movie with, so I'm used to it, but working with him again on "Wendell Baker," I hadn't worked with him since "The Tenenbaums." It's just really fun. The guy just has tons of ideas. He's one of those guys like Will Ferrell. Somebody yells "Cut," and the whole crew is laughing. It's just kind of a fun environment.

Q: Are you working on any side projects?

A: I'm working on a script for myself and Martin Lawrence that I pretty much have finished. We'll just see if it's something we're able to get going. Then I'm getting ready to do a movie with Mark Pellington in July. I have another idea for kind of a Bad News Bears type of movie that I'm working on with a couple of friends.

Q: Are you a big sports fan?

A: Pretty big. I like football. I watch football and golf, but I like going to sporting events a lot.

Q: If you were the Oakland Raiders would you take Brady Quinn or Ja-Marcus Russell?

A: If I were the Oakland Raiders?

Q: Yes, Al Davis said, "Luke, you take over the Oakland Raiders."

A: Right. Who was the other guy besides Brady Quinn?

Q: JaMarcus Russell, the quarterback out of LSU.

A: Yes. I think I'd go with him over Brady Quinn, who I really like. I don't know. You never know. It's like Joe Montana coming out of Notre Dame. I don't even know that he was a No. 1 draft pick. He might have been. I don't know. That's a tough one.

Professor researches media's lack of focus on older women

By Willow Williamson KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fashion industry and media flood the market with pictures of tall, skinny, young models, showing off the clothing of the teenaged and college-aged population, enticing people to buy. But magazines, newspapers and television show few older fashion models or trendy products geared toward them.

Joy Kozar, assistant professor in apparel, textiles and interior design, is researching the fashion industry and the lack of advertising geared toward older women.

She said it is disadvantageous to the marketers to continue ignoring older

"The older consumers are the largest and wealthiest consumer group in the marketplace," said Kozar, who earned a Ph.D. in apparel and textiles from Iowa State University, "yet they are virtually ignored by the fashion industry."

Older women still are concerned with how they look, and they desire to be fashionable, Kozar said. But because trendy retailers rarely use older models to advertise, older women do not know what clothes would be fashionable and still age-appropriate.

If the retailers used older models, Kozar said, older women would be more apt to buy their clothing, even if it was the same clothing being marketed toward teens and college-aged women.

Kozar's studies shown when older women looked at two different models, one older and one younger, wearing the same clothing, the women considered the clothing the older model was wearing to be more fashionable and more age appropriate.

Another goal of Kozar's research is to understand the definition of beauty in soci-

Kozar said there is a cultural idea of beauty.

Research has shown the more teenagers and collegeaged women are exposed to that idea of beauty, the more they are dissatisfied with their own appearance and the more they yearn to look like the models in advertise-

Kozar's research shows older women rarely compare themselves to models. They desire to stay fashionable, but it is an internal desire, not based on external motivations of society.

"Is there some magical age that we reach that we become less influenced by society's standard?" she said.

Or Kozar said, it could be the older women of today were exposed to fewer media images when they were "The women that are in their 60s and 70s now grew up during a time when they weren't bombarded with so many marketing messages and so many advertisements," she said.

Today, teens are the target of fashion magazines. Kozar said the average American sees an average of 3,000 advertisements every day, and she worries this will have a negative effect on the future of young people.

"So are we creating a society where young girls today are constantly going to be obsessed with their appearance and the way they look just because of the time which they were growing up?" she

Kozar said there are risks involved with incorporating older women into advertis-

If the media and apparel marketers actually started focusing on older women, there is a chance it could have a negative effect on how women see themselves.

"If we start seeing more depictions of older adults in fashion advertisements, is that going to create more body-image disturbances among older women?" she said.

More likely, however, it will create a broader idea of what beauty is and what it means to age. Kozar said because the media and fashion industry are focused on youth, society's definition of "old" is skewed. Most advertisements that feature older people portray them as sick, poor or dependent.

"Given the society in which we live today and the demographic shifts that are occurring, it's just time that we move away from this stereotypical notion of what it means to be old," she said.

Concert to raise funds for education in Africa as part of 'Invisible Children'

By Eric Brown KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Attending local music shows often does not have global implications. But those who assemble in City Park for Saturday night's concert will benefit education half way around the world.

K-State students and Manhattan residents will sponsor a five-band, four-hour concert Saturday night in City Park to raise money for "Schools for Schools," a program affiliated with Invisible Children Inc.

The fundraising event will be from 6 to 10 p.m. The five bands will perform from 6 to 8:30, followed by a showing of the documentary film "Invisible Children" from 8:30 to

There will be no cover charge to attend the concert, but donations will be taken throughout the night. T-shirts, photographs, body art and baked goods will be on sale to raise additional funds.

The money raised at Saturday night's show will be used to help rebuild an educational facility in the city of Gulu in northern Uganda.

Gulu is one of many communities affected by the ongoing insurgency of the Lord's Resistance Army, which is the focus of the film "Invisible Children."

"I saw the film for the first time about a year and a half ago and immediately developed a passion for this cause," said Katie Whitney, sophomore in anthropology and co-coordinator of Saturday's event. "This film is eye opening, and I hope it can make people realize that there are places in the world like this that need our help."

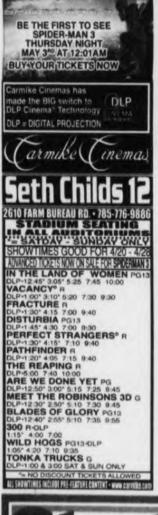

Bands and artists playing at tomorrow night's concert are Dropjaw, Tyler Gregory, McCoy and Kula Voyage, with percussion performances by John Aspirin and Daniel Aguilar between the band's sets.

"This is a documentary and cause that I've had a strong interest in for quite some time, and I'm glad to be a part of it," said Jeremy Chugg, junior in English and lead singer and guitarist for McCoy.

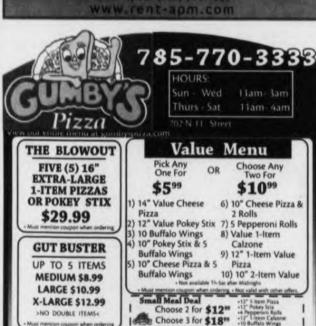

According to its Web site, Invisible Children Inc. started as a result of the 2003 documentary "Invisible Children: Rough Cut," which was based on the experiences of three college students, Jason Russell, Bobby Bailey, and Laren Poole, visiting northern Ugan-

"I hope that people will come Saturday night and see that this is something very worthwhile and will then also support other related events in the future," Whitney said.

SPRING GAME GUIDE

www.kstatecollegian.com | Friday, April 20, 2007 | Vol. 111, No. 144

The power of

Ron Prince needed just one year to put his stamp on the K-State football program. He brought new players, new traditions and, ultimately, new life to a program that had fallen on hard times.

Now, as Prince and the Wildcats stand on the threshold of year No. 2, questions abound. Can K-State build on its first bowl appearance since 2003? Will the new 3-4 defense take the Wildcats to the next level? Can quarterback Josh Freeman avoid the dreaded sophomore slump?

Of course, it's too early to tell. But starting Saturday, year No. 1 is ancient history, and year No. 2 is all that matters.

6 p.m. Saturday Snyder Family Stadium Last year: White beat Purple, 21-14 Josh Freeman returns this season as the only Wildcat with Division I experience at the quarterback position. Last year, he mixed brilliant performances with ones that hed rather not remember on his way to throwing six touchdowns and 15 interceptions.

of the Field with Carson Coffman

By Jonathan Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the business world, many people might say freshman quarterback Josh Freeman would have job security, but in the business world you are not likely to get mauled by a 300-pound defensive tackle. This is where redshirt freshman quarterback Carson Coffman comes in. Coffman did not see any playing time last season, but for the next three years, he will be watching Freeman's every move waiting for his chance to call the plays. Coffman's father, Paul, a former K-State tight end and three-time NFL Pro Bowler, said he was pleased with Coffman's decision to become a Wildcat. Coffman recently answered questions ranging from his relationship with Freeman to NFL players he has met.

Q. What made you decide to come to K-State?

A. They were my best choice. I only had offers from North Texas and K-State. All the quarterbacks started leaving, so they put me on scholarship.

Q. What is your relationship with Freeman like?

A. We've been best friends ever since I can remember. My dad knew his dad, and so we would hang out all the time. We also went to grade school together.

Q. When do you plan on taking the starting job from Freeman?

A. No comment, but if I had to answer I'd say as soon as possible.

Q. If you modeled your game after one player, who would it be?

A. I'd like to model my play after Peyton Manning. I like how he takes control of the game and knows everything that is going on. Q. Your brother Chase is a successful tight end at Missouri. When you two have a game on the same day, which one do your parents go to?

A. They'll usually go to which ever one is at home, but sometimes they split up. They tend to go watch Chase though because he's playing.

Q. Why did your brother choose Missouri instead of K-State?

A. I think he just liked what they were doing with the offense. When he was being recruited, K-State was looking for big blocking tight-ends, but he liked the spread offense that Missouri had.

Q. Did your dad suggest you play quarterback because he got tired of throwing to your brother?

A. No, I'm not sure why I started playing quarterback. I was in sixth grade.

Q. What was your experience as a redshirt freshman last year like?

A. I was just on the scout team and I didn't get any reps, so I got to sit back and watch what Dylan and Josh did and learn from their mistakes

Q. Do people ever come up to you and start talking about your dad because he was in the NFL?

A. Right now they probably talk more about my brother than my dad because he is playing now. A lot of alumni will talk about my dad though because they knew him.

Q. Have you met any notable NFL players because of your dad?

A. Yeah, I've met a lot. My dad has good connections with the Kansas City Chiefs and the Green Bay Packers because he played there. We would go down to the locker room to see players. That's where I met Peyton Manning and Brett Favre.

OFFENSE

Offensive coordinator James Franklin must be licking his chops. With quarterback Josh Freeman, tight end Rashaad Norwood and wideouts Jordy Nelson and Daniel Gonzalez, Franklin's squad looks stacked on offense. Freeman should have a solid offensive line in front him, anchored by senior Logan Robinson and junior Jordan Bedore. The ground game could present the biggest question mark for the Purple squad. Junior John McCardle is the only running back on the roster with game experience, and he has a grand total of five career carries.

Even though the Purple squad has a decided advantage on paper, the gap might not be as wide as it appears. Senior running back James Johnson has been one of the stars of spring practice, and he could be poised for a big game. Leon Patton adds some big-play potential, although he could be slowed by nagging injuries. If freshman quarterback Carson Coffman limits his mistakes and comes up with a few timely throws, Tim Tibesar's team can hang with the Purple squad. Junior wide receiver Cedric Wilson will have a chance to shine as Coffman's primary target.

DEFENSE

Senior linebacker Justin Roland is a big hitter who would like to introduce himself formally to K-State fans after seeing limited action last season. Meanwhile, junior safety Gary Chandler will look to make a good impression in his first game as a Wildcat. Cornerbacks Justin McKinney and Byron Garvin bring some experience to the Purple defense, but Franklin will need some young players to step up at the other positions. The Purple team is particularly thin at outside linebacker and defensive end.

Wildcat fans should pay special attention to the White defense. With first-string players like Marcus Watts, Ian Campbell and Rob Jackson, this defense looks a lot like the unit K-State will put on the field for its season opener. However, don't expect Tibesar to give away too much about K-State's new 3-4 defense. The defensive looks will be basic with few blitzes. Still, K-State fans will be interested to see how Campbell and Eric Childs are handling the switch from defensive end to outside linebacker.

SPECIAL TEAMS

The battle to replace Jeff Snodgrass will be a heated one, and Ohio transfer Brooks Rossman will have a chance to make a case for himself as the Purple squad's kicker. Coach Ron Prince is not likely to name a starter until fall, but you can bet he is paying close attention to how K-State's kickers perform during spring practices. Senior Cole Brokenicky will handle punting duties for the Purple squad.

Another heated position battle will be at punt returner, where several players are competing to replace Yamon Figurs. Sophomore cornerback Joshua Moore might get a chance to field a few punts for the White squad, especially if Patton can't go. Junior Jared Parker, another candidate to handle K-State's place-kicking duties, will suit up for the White. His strong leg could be an advantage, especially with a new rule that moves the ball back five yards on kickoffs.

Community college transfer living up to hype in practice

By Nick Dunn KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Occasionally a defensive player comes along who can make the game look easy, gliding across the field at a different speed than those around him, unloading on opponents with an unmatched ferocity.

K-State coach Ron Prince knows it is still early, but he has a feeling Gary Chandler has a chance at becoming that type of player.

"We can see very clearly that he is going to be the player that we thought," Prince said.

Since last season's starting strong safety, Kyle Williams, was a senior, Prince and the rest of the coaching staff knew they would have a hole to fill, so they went after a player who was almost a Wildcat two years ago.

Chandler - a 5-foot-11, 186-pound junior safety from Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College - signed to play with Bill Snyder's team as a senior at Wichita Heights High School.

However, he was a non-qualifier out of high school and was placed at Coffeyville.

While Chandler was there, the situation at K-State changed. Snyder retired.

But that didn't mean K-State stopped recruiting him.

"Once coach Snyder retired, my mind kind of drifted other ways," Chandler said. "I had the opportunity to go to some other schools, but when coach Prince was hired, he stayed on me hard and recruited me hard and it just worked out in the end."

Those other schools, according to the recruiting Web site Rivals.com, included top-tier programs like Louisville and Nebraska. But in the end, Prince landed the four-star recruit.

"Coach Snyder really wasn't that involved in my recruiting process (during high school)," Chandler said. "But coach Prince, he wrote me a lot of hand-written notes, letting me know that he was very interested in me and he wanted me to come back."

Just how quickly Chandler will have an effect, though, remains to be seen. He is rated No. 5 in Rivals.com's Junior College Top 100, but even highly touted junior college transfers sometimes struggle with the switch to Division I.

Last year, running back James Johnson was rated the No. 9 junior college player, but he totaled only 11 carries for 21 yards in the first seven games of the season before exploding down the stretch. Johnson frequently said it took him a while to adjust to the speed of the game, a thought Chandler echoed.

"There's just a lot more athletes on the field than in junior college," Chandler said. "I'm not saying there's not that many down in junior college, but there's a lot more here. The tempo's just very

"Everything's going really quickly, but you just got to be prepared before you step out

A factor that could play to Chandler's advantage is that he already is practicing with Johnson and defensive end Rob Jackson did not arrive in Junior Gary Chandler (21) stands with teammates Justin Roland (51) and Chris Carney (30) during a practice this spring. Chandler transferred to K-State this season and will play safety for the Wildcats.

Manhattan until the fall, and their performances early in the season suffered as a result.

Chandler, on the other hand, is getting his kinks ironed out before fall arrives, and he is learning from some of the veterans along the

"If I see that he's doing something wrong, I'll be right there to tell him about how things are supposed to be," said senior Marcus Watts, who likely could pair with Chandler as the starting safeties. "He knows that he's got a learning curve still ... and he makes mistakes and he asks about it, and we tell him and he will go out there and correct it."

Yes, Chandler is doing his best to learn as quickly as he can. He is studying the playbook as much as possible.

But something that is impossible to teach is athleticism, and Prince said he knows Chandler will be just fine in that area.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

"Some people talk about athleticism - he has burst," he said. "He can really change direction and change speed. This is a safety who can run and move and change direction, but he can still pack a punch.

"That's what has us so excited about him."

McKinney, K-State corners prepare for life out on the island

By Jeffrey Rake KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Standing alone near midfield of K-State's indoor football facility, cornerback Justin McKinney is convinced - for a moment, anyway - that getting cheated on by a girlfriend is the worst feeling in the world.

Then he's reminded of the 2006 Texas Bowl game against Rutgers, when he got beat deep on a play late in the first quarter in one of the biggest games of his college career.

McKinney was lined up eight yards off the line of scrimmage against Scarlet Knights' wide receiver Tim Brown, and backpedaled at the snap as Brown ran a fly route down the sideline. By the time McKinney could get his hips turned, Brown already was two yards past him. The pass from quarterback Mike Teel landed softly over Brown's left shoulder near the goal line, with McKinney at least three full steps behind. Touchdown.

Replaying the events back in his mind, McKinney decided he wanted to reconsider. Nothing, he said, could hurt more than that play.

"For me to get beat like that in a big game, that was probably the worst feeling I've ever had. Ever. Ever, ever," he said. "That was the worst I've gotten beat in my whole life."

McKinney drops his head, looks back up and smiles.

"You can't have an off play as a cornerback," he said.

A year ago K-State played a lot of Cover 2 under former coordinator Raheem Morris, which meant cornerbacks had the benefit of having two deep safeties to help out in coverage. However, with new defensive coordinator Tim Tibesar comes a change in strategy, as the Wildcats will employ a 3-4 as their base defense and are expected to put more pressure on the quarterback with various blitz packages.

As a result, K-State's corners likely will be asked to play more man-to-man defense and will have to play alone on an island, sometimes with no help over the top. McKinney, a senior who had a team-high eight pass breakups last year, said single coverage is not something that scares him. In fact, he embraces it.

"I'd always rather just go one-on-one. I feel like I've been doing it so long that I never feel like I've got help even if I do got help," he said. "I don't have any objections to being out on an island. I love it. It's fun."

Certainly it wasn't fun for him against Rutgers. That one bad play resulted in his team falling behind 14-0 (on the way to a 37-10 loss) and the run back to the sideline was a lonely one. He said he felt like he let his teammates down.

Still, he's come to terms with it because he understands the nature of the cornerback position. There's no hiding when the ball is up in the air. No excuses, either.

"The consequences of failure at their position is a touchdown," coach Ron Prince said of the cornerbacks. "So they have to be OK with it, and they have to have short mem-with it'

Most players, of course, don't have the mental capacity - or the athleticism, for that matter - to play the cornerback position. It takes a special player to balance the physical demands of the position while staying under poise. More than anything, it takes thick skin. One bad play can completely ruin a game's worth of good ones. Every down is a test of character, a new challenge.

"When you make plays out ory. You have to be at peace on the island, it's all good. Everybody loves you," McKinney said. "But as soon as you give up a touchdown, it's like you're the sorriest person on the field."

> The position, McKinney said, has taught him how to deal with adversity. Then again, he has no other choice. Life on the island is full of twists and turns

> "It's hard man, I'm not even going to lie," he said. "I can't explain it. There's just something about the second ary position - the corner position - that's different than every other position on the field. I mean, people should realize

But McKinney said he knows most people won't -"People come out here to see touchdowns" - and that he'll just have to focus on making plays and creating turnovers. He doesn't want a repeat of the Rutgers game, nor does he want that feeling again. Especially not in his senior

"I play for everybody," he said.

McKinney starts talking about former coach Bill Snyder, who told him to put his athleticism first and not to listen to what people say.

Then that smile reappears, and a sense of pride pours through his face as he continues to explain the life of a cornerback.

"It's just trying to survive to another play, the next snap," McKinney said. "It's mind over matter."

Offensive line looks to improve play from last season with experienced starters

By Cedrique Flemming KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Quarterback Josh Freeman started only eight games of last season after backing up thensenior Dylan Meier for the first Meier's collegiate career is done, and Freeman will enter his sophomore season as the unquestioned No. 1 quarterback. He and his teammates would like to correct many aspects of the game before the start of next season, but one glaring weakness in K-State's offense from a year ago is the fact that Freeman spent most of his freshman campaign either on his back or throwing the ball to the team wearing the other jerseys.

He appeared in 11 total games, throwing only six touchdowns to 15 interceptions. Even in his limited playing time, he was still dragged down enough to rank as the the fourth-highest-sacked quarterback in the Big 12 Conference, going down

Freeman made a lot of nifty plays with his feet last season, including that game-winning 21-yard scamper which clinched the 31-27 victory over Oklahoma State in his first collegiate start. He ended last year with 163 yards gained on the ground, but after all the sacks and lost-yardage runs, he netted negative 21 total rushing yards.

This could have been a product of an offensive line that started six different lineups and also saw 11 different players receive at least one start throughout last year.

Senior Logan Robinson is one of those offensive linemen who received significant playing time a year ago as he held down the right guard position for the final four games of the season.

He said the offensive line did take a lot of the blame for why Freeman could not get a comfortable pocket to throw from very often, and spring is the best time to start improving in that crucial area.

"That has a lot to do with the offensive line, and we take a lot of responsibility for that," Robinson said. "That's something that we severely want to correct to make sure that doesn't happen again. It's focused on everybody doing their job right and doing what they're supposed to do, which is something we want to correct as soon as possible."

Coach Ron Prince said having a high number of players who received playing time last year will do nothing but help this year's team because many players have plenty of game experience.

We have a number of players who are improving their skills. When you multiply that with the number of variables that they are seeing from the defense in the spring, they are improving, and they are getting challenged," Prince said. "It is one of those things where with all the versatility and multiplicity that we are showing on defense - it has now added another brick to the load for those guys, which is good. We have been real pleased with how they are getting prepared and how they have been at practice."

More practice is one way to make the front five better, but Prince also has decided to improve the line by bringing in more of them. He went all the way to San Francisco (Calif.) Community College to find junior Alesana Alesana, a possible starting left tackle. Alesana was a 2006 firstteam California all-state selection by the coaches association while helping the Rams to an 18-3 record and two Nor Cal championships in his two seasons with the team, which included a berth in the title game last year.

San Francisco averaged 409 yards per game last year and Alesana anchored an offensive line that saw its quarterback finish third in the state in total of-

He said he has been adapting to the speed of Division I football and struggling to learn the new offense, but his experience with the Rams will help him as he tries to become the starting left tackle for the Wildcats next

"The first practice with the team was horrible, but I feel like I'm getting better. You learn to play and keep progressing, and I feel like I'm adjusting well now," he said. "Hopefully I can help eliminate the sacks from last year. I am going to just try and eliminate as many of them as possible."

Senior safety serves as positive example to younger, less experienced K-State players

By Austin Meek KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The realization began to sink in the moment Marcus Watts took the practice field for the first time this spring.

He stood beside Jordy Nelson, a fellow senior, and realized this was it. The last goround.

"I remember the first practice, me and Jordy were like, 'This is weird. We're seniors. We're the oldest guys out here." Watts said.

Watts, a senior free safety, is entering his fifth season with the K-State program. He arrived as a walk-on, an underdog, a long-shot. He was a small-town Kansas kid, a player few expected to excel at the Division I level.

Now, as he prepares for his final season in Manhattan, Watts is a legitimate allconference candidate. The product of Havs, Kan., said his success stems from those early years, when he had to prove to everyone he belonged. He wasn't as big or as fast as some of the other players, so he compensated by playing like a wild man whenever he was on the

"I always try to carry a chip on my shoulder," Watts said. "I'm out to prove a lot of things. People think small towns aren't very big into football. People think we can't make it. You've always got the chip on your shoulder to prove you deserve to be Watts did just that, emerging as one of K-State's most dependable playmakers. He was named the team's defensive MVP as a sophomore and recorded a team-high three interceptions last season.

But Watts' reckless abandon also landed him on the sideline on two separate occasions. He dislocated his hip in the final game of his sophomore season and suffered a wrist injury against Oklahoma State a year ago.

Watts doesn't talk much about the injuries now. After sitting out last spring, Watts said he's happy just to be on the field, especially with K-State installing a few new defensive wrinkles

"It's just nice to be out there with the guys, especially since we're learning a new defense again," Watts said. "It's really easy for me to learn new defenses, and I feel really comfortable in this defense already."

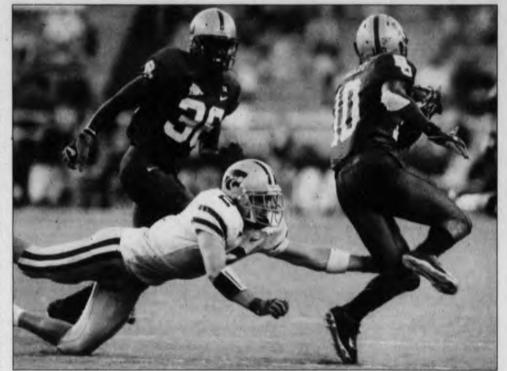

Clearly, no one appreciates a healthy Marcus Watts more than coach Ron Prince. Throughout the spring, Prince has touted Watts as an example for K-State's younger players.

This a very versatile player," Prince said of Watts. "He's one of the very best pass defenders we have. This is one of the very best special teams players we have.

"Gary Chandler, Chris Carney, Andrew Erker - all these guys have benefitted from Marcus' experiences."

Chandler is another Kansas kid, a product of Wichita Heights High School. He arrived on campus in January after two years at Coffeyville Community College, where he established a reputation as one of the best junior college safeties in the nation.

However, Chandler said

there still is plenty he can learn from a veteran like

"He's a really good player," Chandler said of Watts. "Anytime I get a chance to ask some questions, he's there to answer them."

For younger players preparing for their first Spring Game, Watts offered a few words of advice, spoken like a true veteran.

"Just go out there and have fun," he said. "You've still got another five months before the first game. It's not like you're going to live and die by one game."

Meanwhile, Watts knows the eves of countless Kansas kids will be on him when he takes the field. He knows what he represents - a chance to overcome the odds.

It's an honor, he said, but also a responsibility. Watts treats it just like a fluttering pass or a loose fumble.

"You've got to take on an extra burden," Watts said, "but you take it with open arms and run with it."

3-4 defensive scheme gives new look to Wildcat football team

By Ryne Witt KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State football during the 2006 season had a total makeover. Fans saw a whole new offense and a whole new defense. This year, with the mass exodus of coaches during the offseason, the Wildcats will take on another new identity on defense with new defensive coordinator Tim Tibesar and the 3-4 forma-

The 3-4 defense is differdefense played mostly in the 4-3 formation.

"We played three-down, four-down, we played fivedown. We played a variety of things," said coach Ron Prince. "That's the nature of our league and really the nature of a lot of leagues."

The defensive line in the 4-3 has four down lineman. while in 3-4 there are three. The defensive line consists of two defensive ends and a nose tackle.

All of the linemen have to have big bodies and the ability to take up blockers for the 3-4 to be successful.

By taking up blockers it gives the linebackers a chance ent from last year when the to make plays. K-State has had success with that this spring.

> "I think our defensive line has been a nice surprise for us," Prince said. "(Defensive end) Rob Jackson has been basically unblockable."

In the 3-4, there are four linebackers, two inside and two outside. The inside linebackers try to clog the middle and need to be consistent tacklers.

"The scheme puts a little more responsibility on us (as middle linebackers)," said senior linebacker Marcus Perry. "But it also gives us opportunities to put ourselves in situations where we can make big plays and have the people around us make big plays."

The outside linebackers have different responsibilities, and for players like junior Ian Campbell and sophomore Eric Childs, that responsibility is greater because they are moving from defensive end to the outside linebacker positions. They have responsibilities of pass coverage now instead of just trying to get into the backfield.

"The biggest difference this year is recognizing what I am seeing and the responsibilities I have," Campbell said.

Campbell had success last year as a defensive end. He had 67 total tackles, 11.5 sacks, three fumble recoveries and one forced fumble. He was chosen as the Big 12 Conference Defensive Play er of Year by the Houston

Many teammates have enjoyed watching Campbell and Childs, who also was a defensive end last season, make the transition to outside linebacker. "Watching Ian try to backpedal is kind of funny, but Ian and Childs have done a great job," Perry said. "They really adapted to it very well and are able to make really big plays and make an impact on our defense as a whole."

With the new scheme it means the players have to learn new terminology to go along with the new schemes and responsibilities.

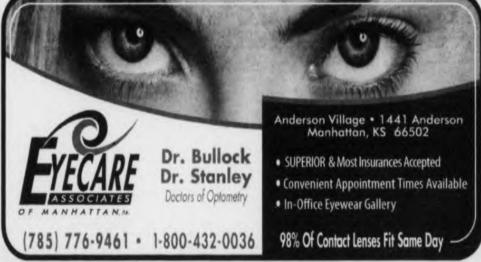

'It's different terminology, but that is basically all you have to learn," Campbell said. "We have been through three different defensive coordinators since I've been here and once you figure out what that (term) used to be in old system, it is pretty clear."

This spring, the defense is starting to see what it might look like this fall.

"I think that we're going to be a lot more aggressive team, and I think if you're a more aggressive team it's going to make you better, period, because the more aggressive you are, the less the opposing offense has a chance to get into rhythm," said senior safety Marcus Watts. "I think once the fall comes around we're going to become more aggressive, and we're going to give some teams some prob-

The Collegian sports staff created what it believes would be the ultimate K-State quarterback, taking the best attributes from each great quarterback from the Bill Snyder and Ron Prince eras.

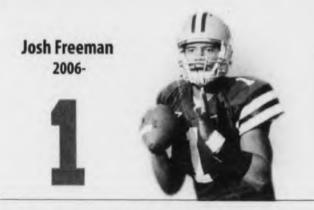

Legs | Roberson had 2,818 rushing yards in his college career, the most of any K-State quarterback. Enough said.

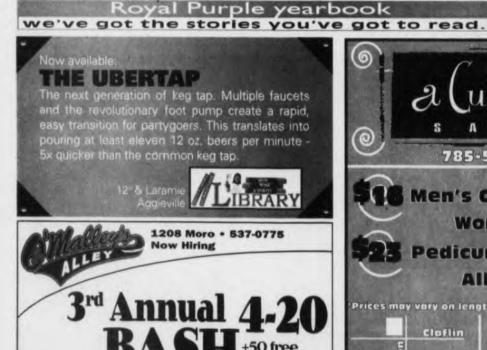

Toughness | Go to youtube.com and search for "Dwayne Slay hits Allan Evridge" — the fact that he is still alive proves his toughness. In his only year here, he played behind a struggling offensive line and was hit all season, but he always got up.

Arm | This could have gone to Michael Bishop because of arm strength, but Freeman has the ability to be a pure passer with more accuracy than Bishop.

Body | The type of quarterback people are talking about for this year's NFL draft is JaMarcus Russell, who is 6-foot-5, 256 pounds. Freeman is 6-foot-6 and 240, but he is only a freshman, which means he has the potential to grow.

Freshman found dead in apparent suicide

By Scott Girard KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 19-year-old K-State freshman was found dead in her residence hall room Friday morning from an apparent suicide, according to a press release from K-State Media Relations.

Nicole Fowler, freshman in open option, was found at 9:30 a.m. in her room on the first floor of Goodnow

According to the release, Fowler was in her first semester at K-State.

Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life, said counselors from University Counseling Services and the dean of student life office will be available this week for any student who needs assistance.

Kipp Van Dyke, residence life coordinator at Goodnow Hall, was unavailable for comment.

Services are pending with Irvin Parkview Funeral Home, according to the release.

Multi-faith service honors Va. Tech victims

By Eric Davis KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The people of Manhattan remembered victims of the Virginia Tech University shootings in an interfaith memorial service in the K-State Student Union on Friday morning.

The servicé included a candle-lighting ceremony, readings from various religious texts and 32 rings of the bell at Anderson Hall.

Those who shared gave messages of hope, love and peace. Mark Weiss, professor of anatomy and physiology, shared a Jewish prayer with the crowd and said the murders hit close to home because they were close to the anniversary of the death of his father.

Buddhist, Christian and Hindu viewpoints also were represented at Fifty-four laps.

After 12 hours of walking, laughing and consuming as much pizza, Chex Mix and Dr Pepper as my stomach could hold, my left forearm boasted 54 blue tally marks a record of the number of laps I had made during K-State's Relay for Life on Friday night.

Although I previously had heard about Relay for Life during my four years at K-State, I never had joined in the night-long event to raise awareness of and finances for the American Cancer Society, even though my mother was diagnosed with breast cancer my sophomore year of college.

But this year, I made a choice for change. I joined hundreds of participants at Memorial Stadium to be a part of Relay for Life, an event that raised more than $56,000 for the American Cancer Society.

During the opening ceremonies, the event's planning committee explained the purpose of Relay for Life and the reason the event took place overnight. The hours of the night correspond to the sequence of events a cancer patient goes through, including a patient's diagnosis, treatment and recovery.

Following opening ceremonies, the committee asked cancer survivors present to take a survivor lap, while the disc jockey played the fans ride the Ferris wheel before the Spring Game on Saturday at Snyder Family Stadium.

Fan Fest includes BBQ contest, carnival to draw crowd for pre-football event

By Brie Handgraaf KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the Spring Game was the main event at Snyder Family Stadium on Saturday, people enjoyed activities all weekend long.

One event offered something none of the others had - the ubiquitous aroma of barbecue

Many consider Kansas City one of the founding cities when it comes to barbecue styles, but for the second year, the KSU Wildcat BBQ Contest was not limited to Midwesterners. This year, 64 teams traveled from six states, including North Dakota and Minnesota, to try their recipes in four categories: chicken, pork shoulder or butt, beef brisket and pork ribs

Each team in the contest chose a team name, most of which described the team members' personalities. Some of the names included 4-Legs-Up Barbecue, Hole-in-the-Wall Barbecue, Pigs in Heat and Slow-Cookin'

The Beaux Hawgs from Overland Park, Kan., said they have been competing in barbecue contests for more than a decade. Team member Brian Landry said the team name came from an old Louisiana saying he had heard all his life that means "beautiful pig."

The Beaux Hawgs prepared each dish they submitted with team member Kelly Bauer's original rubs, specific to each type of meat. Bauer said he developed the rubs over time through trial and error, which he said he recommends to any amateur.

Bauer also created his own special sauces, one spicy and one sweet. He said the sweet sauce generally scores better with the judges though everyone on his team prefers the spicy one.

CONOVER, N.C. - A store clerk's slip-up at the cash register has paid off big time.

Wadburn Allen accidentally rang up two duplicate Powerball tickets for a customer in western North Carolina on Tuesday.

At the end of the day, after she was unable to sell the second ticket, Allen paid for it herself.

The next day, she returned to the store and found the ticket matched all five Powerball numbers, earning her a $200,000 jack-

When Allen went to Raleigh to claim her prize, she met the customer who purchased the original

'LET'S ALL HATE TORONTO' DOCUMENTARY BARES ALL

TORONTO, Ontario - Dislike of Canada's biggest city, Toronto, by the rest of the country runs so deep that a filmmaker has made a documentary about it.

"People in Toronto are soulless, one-eyed corporate zombies," Joey Keithley, of the Vancouver punk band D.O.A., says in the film, "Let's All Hate Toronto.

The 73-minute film, which premieres at Toronto's Hot Docs documentary festival next week, follows a character called Mister Toronto, who embarks on a cross-Canada trip brandishing a sign that reads "Toronto Appreciation Day" and steels himself for the onslaught.

His tour leads from Newfoundland on the Atlantic Coast to the Pacific city of Vancouver, where feelings against Toronto - usually acknowledged as the country's financial center and the cultural capital of English Canada - run deepest of all.

MAMMOTH, RHINO, BEAR SKELETONS UP FOR AUCTION

PARIS, France - For sale: a 15,000-year-old Siberian mammoth skeleton.

On Monday, Christie's auction house in Paris, which usually sells fine art and furniture, is hosting an unusual auction of paleontological curiosities, including several prehistoric mammals.

Skeletons of a 10,000-yearold, 13.5-foot-long rhinoceros and a 7.5-foot-high cave bear are also going under the hammer. The skeletons are owned by a private collector, but buyers may include museums or artists, said Christie's spokesperson Capucine Milliot.

The auction is not to all paleontologists' liking. Pascal Tassy, professor at the city's Natural History Museum, has decried the selling off of specimens that could be useful to science.

ZOO ASKS VISITORS NOT TO STARE AT CHIMPS

ANTWERP, Belgium - Everyone knows not to feed the animals when visiting the zoo. Now the Antwerp Zoo has urged visitors to please stop staring at the chimpanzees, too.

New rules have been posted outside the chimp enclosure at the city zoo urging visitors not to form a bond with a particular male chimp named Cheetah. He was raised by humans but is now bonding with the seven other apes at the park, a zoo official said Wednesday.

"We ask, we inform our daily visitors and other visitors that one of the monkeys is particularly open for human contact," zoo spokeswoman Ilse Segers told AP Television News. "He was raised by humans in a family, and therefore, we are trying to integrate him, to try to get more social integration with the group."

'POPE'S CAR' ON EBAY DOESN'T SELL - AGAIN SAN FRANCISCO - A 1999

metallic gray Volkswagen Golf believed to have once belonged to the pope went up for sale on eBay, but the car didn't sell.

For the second time in two years, eBay hosted an auction for a car said to be Pope Benedict XVI's old hatchback. Though bids surpassed $204,000 (euro150,000), a reserve price was not met by the end of the auction Saturday.

The car's owner, a Texas-based online casino, Golden Palace.com, bought the car in 2005 on eBay from a German man. The casino had posted two German automobile registration documents that list "Josef Kardinal Ratzinger" as the vehicle's previous owner.

WINNIE THE POOH BEAR CAUSES BOMB SCARE

WRIGHT CITY, Mo. - A man who went to a Missouri post office to pick up a novelty phone he ordered over the Internet was alarmed that the package was ticking; it subsequently created a bomb scare.

It turned out that the phone, shaped like Winnie the Pooh, had a feature the customer did not know about. An incoming call causes Winnie's head to spin, and the feature apparently had been activated during shipping.

The ticking that prompted evacuation of the Wright City post office Thursday morning was Winnie's head repeatedly hitting the side of the package, said Missouri Highway Patrol spokesperson Cpl. Julie Scerine.

Police and members of the bomb squad were called when the man retrieving the package noticed the unexpected sound. Wright City is about 45 miles west of St. Louis.

'Let's Just Play' event provides 'slimy fun'

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's greek community went to work for Manhattan's children Sunday.

Let's Just Play, an event several K-State sororities and fraternities organized with the help of Nickelodeon and Cox Communications, took place Sunday in City Park and showed children fun and creative ways to exercise and be outside.

The event started with a Nickelodeon-style game show that featured audience participation, slime and trivia. Children went on stage to answer questions and identify sound clips from different Nickelodeon shows.

Eleven stations throughout the park offered various games for the children to play. In the southeast corner of the park, children could play broom hockey, a sport similar to ice or field hockey, but played with brooms and a softball.

The broom-hockey station was not busy, said Nick Jasso, sophomore in life sciences.

Ryan Collett, senior in kinesiology, is playfully attacked by children with slime-filled sponges. Collett said he was filming a documentary when he was bombarded by the children at Sunday's Let's Just Play.

Although his area was not packed, he said, he still had a good time.

"Earlier, we had a slimecovered kid kick a ball into the face of the goalie," Jasso said. "It was pretty funny."

In the sand-volleyball pits, children could participate in a tug-of-war game in which the losing team's leader was pulled into slime rather than water.

Kristina Held, sophomore in elementary education, helped participants in the contest. She said her station was popular among the park's visitors.

"Right after the main show in the beginning, we had a bunch of kids run over here," Held said.

Colvin Gibson, a child who attended the event, said he enjoyed the event and the tug-ofwar station.

Jeremy Gibson, Colvin's father, said he would return if Let's Just Play was ever offered

"This has been far better than I expected," Gibson said as he watched his son play tug

Festival highlights aspects of Japanese culture

By Eric Davis

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Visitors in the K-State Student Union participated in aspects of Japanese culture at the annual Central Kansas Japanese Festival Saturday.

Activities included martial arts showcases in the Union Courtyard, candy art in the concourse and carnival games on Bosco Student Plaza.

Sponsors for the event included the Japanese Student Association, the Japanese Appreciation Association, K-State's Department of Modern Languages and the Consulate General of Japan in Chicago.

Visitors could take origami lessons at one of the tables in the concourse. Holly Miller, sophomore in music, helped people make different types of origami. Miller said it usually takes about three minutes to make something simple, but the amount of time per piece depends on the person.

A line formed behind a table where world-renowned candy artist Miyuki Sugimoni performed her craft. Sugimoni, who works at the Epcot Center at Walt Disney World in Florida, made candy animals for a small donation. The proceeds raised from the candy sales will benefit Sunset Zoological Park. Sugimoni, whose grandfather taught her to make candy animals, makes appearances at Japanese festivals around the country.

Paul Richards, senior in electrical engineering, said he was impressed with some of Sugimoni's work that he saw

Benefit concert raises $500 for Ugandan school

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Park was the site of live music, bake sales, large crowds and philanthropy for people thousands of miles away Saturday night. K-State students and Manhattan residents sponsored a five-band, four-hour concert to raise money for "Schools for Schools," a program affiliated with Invisible Children, Inc.

The fund-raising event began at 6 p.m., with the five bands playing their sets followed by a showing of the documentary film, "Invisible Children."

There was no cover charge, but volunteers took donations throughout the night. Others sold T-shirts, photographs, body art and baked goods to raise additional funds.

The money raised at Saturday night's show will help rebuild an educational facility in the city of Gulu in northern Uganda, one of many communities affected by the ongoing insurgency of the Lord's Resistance Army, which is the focus of "Invisible Children."

Katie Whitney, sophomore in anthropology and event cocoordinator, said about 150 people attended the event, which raised $500.

"I was very pleased with the turnout overall," Whitney said. "I would have liked more people to stay around for the film, but I still feel like a lot of people got the message and we accomplished what we had hoped to."

The bands and artists that performed were Dropjaw, Tyler Gregory, McCoy and Kula Voyage, with percussion performances by John Aspirin and Daniel Aguilar between sets.

"It was a cool thing to be a part of," said Pedersen, also known as Dropjaw. "It's good to be a part of shows where the cause is bigger than the music."

According to Invisible Children, Inc.'s Web site, Invisible Children began as a result of the 2003 documentary "Invisible Children: Rough Cut," which was based on the experiences of three college students – Jason Russell, Bobby Bailey and Laren Poole. The group visited northern Uganda, where they found thousands of people affected by the LRA's insurgency. Their documentary focuses on the war's effects on children, particularly child soldiers.

About 50,000 Ugandan children are abducted each year to become a part of the LRA. Thousands of children fled their homes nightly in order to escape being abducted.

Invisible Children, Inc. was designed to help this problem and has produced other organizations throughout the world, like Schools for Schools and a program called "Replace,Me."

"Saturday night's concert was kind of a pump-up for an upcoming Replace Me event," Whitney said.

The upcoming Replace Me event will take place Saturday in Kansas City, Kan.

At the fund-raising event, attendees take part in activities that simulate the conditions of those affected by the war in northern Uganda.

Miss | Lackluster Spring Game

After 31,875 fans attended the 2006 Spring Game, making it the seventh-largest spring game in the nation that year, it's difficult to reflect on this year's game without feeling disappointed. Only 16,732 fans showed up, and Josh Freeman led the Purple team to a grand total of zero yards and zero points. At least Ron Prince didn't run away to West Virginia after his first year.

Miss | Lack of Hokie supporters

College campuses across the nation joined together Friday to support Virginia Tech University by wearing maroon and orange. Photos of students at Colorado and KU showed crowds donning Virginia Tech's colors. At K-State, however, the response seemed less enthusiastic. The turnout for the memorial here last week was disappointing, as was the portion of attendees wearing Hokie colors.

Hit | Success of Relay for Life

Students raised more than $56,000 in K-State's annual Re-Students raised more than $56,000 in K-State's annual Re-lay for Life event. Though the total was short of the goal, the relay was successful in almost every aspect. Fifty-five teams spent 12 hours walking laps around Memorial Stadium. Meanwhile, bands performed, participants joined in garnes and activities, and free food was plentiful. The only downside was the 4 a.m. karaoke, which was far from inspiring.

make us rethink how we spend our leisure time.

Hit | Encouraging active children

A childhood icon came to Manhattan this weekend when Nickelodeon was host to "Let's Just Play," a slimefilled event aimed at keeping children active. Though most students were too old to participate in the activities, we can take a lesson from the folks who once kept us in front of the tube for hours on end and remember to get out and

Miss | Blood drive coming up short

Kudos to all those who gave of themselves — literally — by donating to the K-State Blood Drive last week. The drive garnered fewer donations than organizers had hoped, however, and was short of the 800-unit goal. Consider ing that an estimated 60 percent of people are eligible to donate and K-State's campus has more than 20,000 people, we think we could've managed a few more pints.

Americans quick to judge all but those responsible in aftermath of tragedies

It might shock some of you to learn I have my television turned to Fox News as background noise. Unfortunately, because of the constant updates and interviews of Virginia Tech University students and law enforcement this past week, I haven't been able to hear about many world

There's something in those interviews that concerns me - a growing trend that shouldn't be growing. One that blames or asks questions of everyone except those who need it the most.

Examples, you say? Think back to the Columbine High School massacre in 1999. After the tragedy, the media discovered the two killers had loved to listen to Marilyn Manson, whom the public immediately blamed along with all "death metal."

In addition, the media and public blamed video games like "Doom," as well as all the bullies at school - since every kid who is bullied goes on a killing rampage. Every possible source was blamed, but not once did anyone blame Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold. There was sympathy instead, sympathy for their misunderstood lifestyles and their skewed views of reality.

Flash forward two years to Sept. 11, 2001. Nineteen extremist Islamic terrorists hijacked and flew our own planes into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and a field in Pennsylvania. After the initial aftermath, who were we quick to blame?

The Clinton administration, the Bush administration, the Federal Aviation Administration for not catching the box cutters and American Airlines for selling them the tickets - basically, anyone except the 19 cowards who killed innocent people for no reason.

People were afraid of blaming the terrorists for fear of retribution. It's easier to say, "Oh, it's just a fringe group of Islam that is backward and misunderstood," instead of pointing the finger and saying, "It was these men's fault and the fault of the terrorist group they belong to." Many were offended when Toby Keith wrote "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)", but that's what needed to be said.

Now we have Virginia Tech, and the media and public are confused again. Everyone is questioning safety and security measures on campus, everyone's crying for more gun control, and we're even scowling at eBay.com for selling Cho Seung-Hui the weapon magazines he used last week. But no one is blaming Seung-Hui.

No one is pointing the finger at him and saying, "It was his fault. He ran around campus, killing his classmates

No, we don't want a backlash. We want to understand who he was and why he felt the need to compare himself to Jesus and rant about rich kids as his last deed on Earth

Maybe we don't want to feel judgmental, or we want to seem like we care for the aggressor. Maybe we just don't know who to blame. All I know is I've experienced misplaced blame directly from this incident.

As the former president of the Association of Residence Halls, I have a special place in my heart for our halls, and I have heard and read about countless people who want everything as far as security. Let me tell you something: short of completely locking down each hall and posting armed security guards at each wing of each floor of each hall, there's nothing that could stop someone. So instead of looking left and right for something or someone else to blame or using a tragedy to push some agenda, let's look at the real problem and start denouncing these kinds of attacks seri-

Let me be the first to say this: the /irginia Tech killings were not the fault of bullies, not the fault of school administrators who missed tell-tale signs and not the fault of eBay sellers.

They were the fault of one young man who, though clearly unstable, could not handle his own life, and instead of talking with the people who previously tried to help him, took matters into his own, cowardly hands and shot down unarmed schoolmates.

Worldwide swell in urban areas is economically beneficial

By the time you finish reading this column, more than 600 people will have migrated from rural to urban areas. In a day, that number reaches 200,000; in a year's time, it is more than 70 million.

One billion of those urban dwellers live as squatters, occupying land that isn't legally theirs. By 2030, that number will swell to 2 billion, and by 2050, it will be 3 billion.

Though some of that rise could be attributed to overall population growth, it still is an increase from one-sixth to one-third of the projected world population.

Author Robert Neuwirth recounted those facts to an audience at the 2005 Technology Entertainment Design conference, calling this "the new urban world." Even with fewer rights and legal protections than in the West, developing nations are seeing their urban areas swell.

Most squatters, when asked about their reasons for coming, will tell you they came to these urban areas for opportunities. This is a familiar dream, shared by millions of immigrants arriving in the United States from the 17th century to today.

We've had anecdotal confirmation for a while (along with a bevy of movies, including "An American Tail" and "Coming to America"), but last week a study offered some statistical confirmation that urbanization is benefi-

A team of researchers charted data from across the United States, China and the European Union, trying to determine how the size of a city affects different costs and benefits.

They found variables like household consumption of water and electricity remain relatively consistent over a wide range of urban sizes.

Transportation and electrical infrastructure enjoyed an "economy of scale" effect, whereby the per-capita cost went down with the increase of urban areas.

A more beneficial class of attributes is more common in larger cities. Gross Domestic Product and other indicators of economic success and innovation all grow on a per-capita basis.

Though some social ills rise along with metropolitan size (like disease and crime), the authors' study asserts the trend is overwhelmingly positive. Though some people suspect urbanization just pushes the problems elsewhere, it seems like this change is positive on the whole.

For all our concern about globalization and free trade, the United States has a vested interest in ensuring that the rest of the world prospers internally as well.

World Bank loans and programs like the Hundred Dollar Laptop are designed to create these kinds of opportunities.

Because squatting is the primary method of urbanization today, we should pressure our developing allies to adapt their bylaws accordingly.

An excellent model is Turkey, which has two rules encouraging orderly squatting and its ensuing economic benefits.

First, they have an "overnight" rule, whereby any structure constructed in one night cannot be condemned or torn down the following morning without due process.

Second, once any squatter community reaches 2,000 people, the government can be petitioned to recognize it as a legal sub-municipality.

These laws ensure that new residents receive legal protection and inclusion in the political process - two key factors to building the community and connections that drive these urban incomes upward.

Most of the oft-touted solutions for worldwide problems require us to change drastically the behavior of billions. Though this is just one step, it requires that we recognize the already-drastic migration of more than 600 people in just the last five minutes.

Two fires in empty buildings in the north redevelopment project were ruled as arson during the last two months

The first fire was at 320 Leavenworth St., and the second was at 521 N. Third St., said Manhattan Fire Chief Jerry Snyder. He said firefighters found no evidence of accelerants in the buildings, and there was a good chance the fires were started with matches or a lighter.

Snyder said the alarm for the first fire went off at 9:44 p.m. on Feb. 21. Dial Realty, the company working with the city to redevelop the area, owned the vacant apartment building.

Spring Game Fan Fest not so festive

The entertainment value of spring football usually ranks somewhere between youth soccer and

"Matlock" reruns. The players are unmotivated, the coaches are conservative and the fans are still hung over from basketball season.

ception, as the White squad rolled to an uninspiring 19-0 victory over the Purple team. This was football at its worst, complete with interceptions, fumbles, high snaps, low throws, dropped passes and missed blocks.

MEEK

Of course, sloppy spring games are nothing new, which leads to a logical question: why do we play them in the first place?

"I don't know if the Spring Game is really for the players at all," said senior safety Marcus Watts at Tuesday's press conference. "It's mostly for the fans, I think."

To which the 16,732 fans who attended Saturday's Spring Game replied, "Gee, thanks."

Granted, no one showed up expecting a masterpiece. But even the worst spring games usually provide some glimmer of intrigue, some momentary infusion of excitement.

Instead, fans watched quarterback Josh Freeman and the Purple offense do absolutely nothing. That's not an exaggeration - the Purple team finished with zero yards and zero points.

Let's be clear about something: it's difficult to play an entire football game without gaining a single yard. Freeman is 6-foot-6, which means he could gain two yards simply by falling on his face.

Still, coach Ron Prince seemed unconcerned by the woeful offense, choosing to focus on the performance of the White team's defense.

"I'm really excited about the play of the defense," Prince said. "If we came out here and lit up the scoreboard ... I wouldn't be feeling too good right now."

OK, that all sounds fine. The White defense did look pretty impressive, led by junior Reggie Walker's six tackles and senior Rob Jackson's relentless pass rush.

But that didn't make this game any easier to watch.

Coffman-led White team beats Purple, 19-0, Saturday

By Jeffrey Rake KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since the first day of spring practice, K-State coach Ron Prince has been all about "The Power of One," the theme of this year's football team.

But the poor play of quarterback Josh Freeman, who wears jersey No. 1, is all the buzz after his Purple squad lost 19-0 to the White team Saturday in the annual Spring Game at Snyder Family Stadium.

Freeman completed just nine of 22 passes for 44 yards, as the Purple team managed to gain zero yards of total offense. White intercepted two Freeman passes, one of which led to a second-quarter touchdown, and forced five turn-

"We just couldn't get anything going," said Freeman, who faced many of K-State's projected defensive starters. "I'll put that on myself, because I am one of the leaders on the offense. The guys looked to me, and I had nothing for them."

The situation was quite the opposite for freshman Carson Coffman, who was serviceable in his first action since finishing his career 26-0 at Raymore-Peculiar High School (Mo.) in 2005. Coffman led White on two touchdown-starting quarterback job. "If I did anything less, I would be cheating myself," he said.

Whether or not his performance in a scrimmage - which did not much resemble a game-day atmosphere with a crowd of 16,732 will hold any ground remains to be seen. At the very least, however, Coffman might have erased some doubts about his ability. Then again, Prince said he believed in

Windy conditions, erratic pitching cause Wildcats to drop series to Sooners

Oklahoma (27-15, 7-8 Big 12 Conference) took two of three games from the Wildcats (25-15, 6-9 Big 12) this weekend at Tointon Family Stadium, but at times, it seemed more like a parade than a baseball series for the two teams, which combined for 42 walks.

The Wildcats jumped out to an early 2-1 lead Sunday, courtesy of a home run from sophomore Byron Wiley. Oklahoma responded by scoring seven runs in the third inning. "Big innings killed us all weekend," said coach Brad Hill. "It's hard to recoup from six- or seven-run innings." Following the third inning, junior starting pitcher Nich Conaway put the game on cruise control for the Sooners, and despite allowing runs in the fourth and sixth innings, was able to pick up his third win of the season. Conaway's six-inning performance was the longest of his career and improved his record to 3-1.

"Hats off to that team for pitching real well," said senior Eli Rumler. Picking up the loss for the Wildcats was sophomore Ben Hornbeck, whose record dropped to 2-2 on the season.

Hill expressed a need for more self confidence in his pitching staff and said the pitchers should look to junior reliever Daniel Edwards for an exam-

"Guys are a little bit scared," Hill said. "Daniel Edwards wasn't too scared. He comes in and attacks the zone and gets after it. We need to have a few more guys like that."

At the plate, Wiley, junior Derek Bunker and sophomore Drew Biery each collected two hits on the afternoon, while the rest of the order mustered just three combined.

FRIDAY

A six-run fourth inning was the difference in Friday's game for K-State, as the Wildcats went on to win 10-6.

Five walks from Oklahoma junior pitcher Stephen Porlier plated two for the Wildcats and loaded the bases for Bunker. Bunker promptly cleared the table with a two-out grand slam that gave his team a 6-3 advantage.

The Wildcats never looked back from there and went on to seal the deal by scoring two runs in the seventh and another in the eighth.

Bunker, freshman Tyler Ruch and senior Eddie Vasquez each collected two hits to lead the Wildcats. K-State came away with 10 hits and 10 walks on the evening.

On the mound, junior Brad Hutt earned his seventh win of the season and improved his record to 7-2.

SATURDAY

More than 2,000 fans packed the stadium Saturday for a marathon lasting one hour and 39 minutes, in which the Wildcats fell 20-9.

Windy conditions and a small strike zone spelled disaster for pitchers on both sides, who combined for 17 walks.

K-State junior starting pitcher Chase Bayuk was the first to fall victim to the difficult conditions. After working his way out of a jam in the first inning, Bayuk faced seven batters in the top of the second, retiring just one. By the time sophomore reliever Todd Vogel cleaned up the mess, the Sooners had amassed six runs.

Unfortunately, Vogel had the same problem as Bayuk in the third.

Vogel started the inning by walking junior Joe Dunigan on a full count. It wasn't until Dunigan came up again eight batters later that Vogel was able to head back to the dugout. Between Dunigan's two plate appearances, the Sooners racked up six runs on four hits and increased their lead to 12-1.

No. 21 Texas A&M (18-5, 8-2 Big 12) only needed to win one doubles match to take the doubles point because injuries forced the Wildcats to forfeit the No. 3 doubles match. The Aggies easily won the other doubles matches, 8-0 and 8-4.

The only K-State player to win a singles set against an A&M player was sophomore Katerina Kudlackova, who played at No. 3 singles against Anna Blagodarova. Kudlackova won the second set 6-2 after dropping the first set but fell in a tie-breaker in the third set 1-0, (5).

Senior Kaylene Wagner came home with another high-jump title with a season-best leap of 6-1 1/2. She has won four of her five high jump competitions during the outdoor season. Her jump at the Kansas Relays ranks third in the NCAA. She beat her closest competition by about five inches.

In addition to the two event titles, the Wildcats came home with 11 top-five finishes during the relays.

Sophomore Mike Myer finished fifth in the 100-meter dash with a time of 10.41 in the finals. In the preliminaries, Myer ran a 10.4. It was his season best.

On the women's side of the 100-meter dash, junior Marnyka Honeycutt placed third with a time of 11.73.

Sophomore Liliani Mendez found herself near the front of the pack during the 1500-meter race Saturday. She placed third with a time of 4:29.06. She was less than a second behind the second-place finisher and less than four seconds behind the first-place finisher.

The 4x100-meter women's relay team of Honeycutt, senior Monigue Coleman, senior Shunte Thomas and junior Donniece Parrish posted the fastest time in the preliminaries with a time of 45.24 but ended up getting fourth in the finals with a time of 45.45.

"Presence" and "Carjacked" took home top honors at the Little Apple Film Festival Friday night.

The Union Program Council sponsored the festival, which took place in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Filmmaker Jordan Krause wrote, edited and directed "Presence," which took first in the feature-length category. The film was about a singer going through relationships.

Krause worked with several K-State and University of Kansas students to produce the film. He said he and his team shot the film in three months with a budget of $1,500.

He said he thought the festival was well-organized, but it was unfortunate the UPC scheduled the poker tournament on the same night.

Krause said many people donated time and resources to the project, and he thought it was great to hear the film with good sound equipment.

Krause said he got the idea for "Presence" when he went through a nasty breakup. He had shot concerts before, so the idea fell into place. He said the title means different things to different people.

"It can mean stage presence, Christmas presents, all kinds of things," he said. "It means different things on dif-

Krause offered advice for young filmmakers looking into the film industry. He said even though students might not know what they are doing specifically, they should do it anyway.

"There is a part of you that doesn't know what you are doing," he said. "But instinct will kick in, and that talent will come out."

Krause said though K-State might not be known as a film school, events like the Little Apple Film Festival make it easier to become involved in

He said technology has made filmmaking more accessible, and gives non-filmmakers the chance to try their hand at it.

"Filmmaking allows for the independent voices to be heard and the stories that need to be told," he said.

Krause said he was hoping for a bigger turnout, and he plans to submit material again next year.

The other first-place winner, Jordan Sloan for "Carjacked," said he enjoyed the festival. He said he came to Manhattan to see what other films students

Sloan, senior in film at KU, said filmmaking is a tricky business, and it was great to see young filmmakers in

He said he really enjoyed the second-place film, "EveryDayisDayOne," submitted by Mark Hanson, senior in anthropology.

Caitlin Cash, film co-chair for UPC, said the festival was open to all universities. The festival had 11 entries this year, with 10 shorts and one feature. She said the films must have at least one student on the cast or crew, but the festival is open to all students, not necessarily film students.

She said in the future, the community and students should take the opportunity to see the films.

"It is a way to support young filmmakers," she said. "It's a way to foster creativity and check out the new talent that is out there."

LOS ANGELES — Friday on his Web site, Alec Baldwin explained the angry words to his daughter which had been broadcast earlier in the week.

"Although I have been told by numerous people not to worry too much, as all parents lose their patience with their kids I am most saddened that this was released to the media because of what it does to a child,"

he wrote. "I'm sorry, as everyone who knows me is aware, for losing my temper with my child. I have been driven to the edge by parental alienation for many years now. *** 公公 Movie review by Eileen Laux

Carter Webb (Adam Brody) is a soft-core pornography screenwriter in Los Angeles who needs to escape. His girlfriend has broken up

He decides to go visit his grandmother (Olympia Dukakis) in suburban Michigan. Carter takes care of her, and also meets Sarah and Lucy Hardwicke (Meg Ryan and Kristen Stewart), who live across the street.

with him, and he is lost

During his time there, he learns from all of the women suddenly taking part in his life.

"In the Land of Women," is a touching story about learning to deal with life's sorrows while still keeping it together.

Brody does a good job, and Dukakis steals the film with her portrayal of a slightly senile grandmother who is ready to die

Ryan surprises the audience with a performance unlike those of her past films. Her American sweetheart, cookie-cutter character was absent from this film, and rightly so.

Critics have reviewed the film harshly, and some parts deserve it. There are several scenes that didn't fit within the story line. While they might have been intended to provide more character development, it seems they were included more for shock value than substance.

The plot of "Women" differed from the way it was portrayed in advertisements, but it was more refreshing to watch than the adolescent romantic comedy it was promoted as.

The showing-the-whole-film formula is a good one to follow, but not when the audience is expecting a different film altogether.

The cast was well-balanced, and Dukakis and Makenzie Vega, who played the youngest Hardwicke, stole most of their scenes with comic relief.

With an interesting story line and solid performances from all cast members, the film is good, though not great.

The story line with Carter and Lucy lacked direction, but the film gave an accurate depiction of what life is like when people get lost and others, maybe strangers, help them find their way back.

THIS WEEK... A look at events, bizarre holidays, happenings that occurred during this week in history

1564: William Shakespeare born

According to tradition, the great English dramatist and poet William Shakespeare was born in Stratfordon-Avon on April 23, 1564. It is impossible to be certain of his exact birthday, but church records show he was baptized on April 26, and three days was the typical waiting period before baptizing a newborn. Shakespeare's date of death — April 23, 1616 — is conclusively known, however. He was 52 years old and had retired to Stratford three days before.

TUESDAY 1800: Library of Congress established

President John Adams approved legislation to appropriate $5,000 to purchase "such books as may be necessary for the use of Congress," thus establishing the Library of Congress. Today, the collection, housed in three enormous buildings in Washington, contains more than 17 million books, as well as millions of maps, manuscripts, photographs, films, audio and video recordings, prints, and drawings.

WEDNESDAY 1990: Space telescope in orbit

The crew of the U.S. space shuttle Discovery placed the Hubble Space Telescope, a long-term space-based observatory, into a low orbit around Earth. NASA designed the space telescope to give astronomers an unparalleled view of the solar system, the galaxy, and the universe. Free of atmospheric distortions, Hubble has a resolution 10 times that of groundbased observatories. About the size of a bus, the telescope is solar-powered and orbits Earth once every 97 minutes.

THURSDAY

1986: Nuclear disaster at Chernobyl On April 26, the world's worst nuclear power plant accident occurred at the Chernobyl nuclear power station in the Soviet Union. Thirty-two people died and dozens more suffered radiation burns in the opening days of the crisis, but only after Swedish authorities reported the fallout did Soviet authorities reported the fallout did Soviet authorities admit that an accident had occurred. An estimated 5,000 Soviet citizens died from cancer and other radiation-induced illnesses caused by their exposure to the Chemobyl radiation, and the health of millions more was adversely affected. In 2000, the last working reactors at Chernobyl were shut down and the plant was officially closed.

FRIDAY

1667: John Milton sells copyright to Paradise Lost

Blind poet John Milton sells the copyright to his masterpiece, "Paradise Lost," for a mere 10 pounds. In 1651, he lost his sight. Blind, impoverished, and jobless, he began to dictate 'Paradise Lost" to his family. Once printed, the poem immediately was hailed as a masterpiece of the English language. In 1671, he wrote "Paradise Regained," followed by "Samson Agonistes." Milton died in 1674.

song "I'm Walking on Sunshine."

About 25 to 30 survivors had registered for the event, and about 12 attended, said Angela Prewitt, community manager of income development for the High Plains division of the American Red Crimpers hair salon gave survivors in attendance free manicures and pedicures at the beginning of the evening.

Prewitt said 63 teams registered for the event, but about 55 showed up, which was more than last year.

Participants who raised $100 for the event received a T-shirt, purple wristband and free food at the event. Live entertainment was scheduled during the first six hours, including four bands. After previous years, Prewitt said the planning committee received feedback about the event, and people wanted more music to keep energy high.

"We want to keep them being active and keep them going all night," she said.

Tokeepparticipantsawake, event sponsors provided food from Chipotle, Gambino's, Pizza Hut, McDonald's and Daylight Donuts.

At 10 p.m., the event came to a standstill for a luminary ceremony to honor those who died from and survived cancer. Participants sat in silence as stadium lights turned off and the words "hope," "cope" and "cure" were spelled out on one side. Names of cancer survivors and victims appeared on a screen, and participants took a lap in silence to honor them.

Seeing the event take place, Emily Frederick, cochair of the planning committee, said she felt relieved and was able to put things into perspective.

Before she was born, Frederick said she lost her grandparents to cancer. Though she does not remember losing someone to cancer, she said she became involved to prevent people from losing loved

"I relay for the hope that I won't be touched by it," she said. "Everybody has a reason to relay."

Though grateful for the participation of those in attendance, Frederick said she would have liked to see even more people involved.

"It's not just another thing," she said. "I don't think people understand all that ACS does. I don't think people get it as Meredith Karlin, sophomore in secondary education, said she became involved with Relay for Life in high school after listening to a survivor who spoke about her battle with cancer and the importance of relay participants. Karlin said the speaker told relay participants they were doing something important, and Karlin has continued to be involved.

"(Cancer) can affect so many people, yet so many people can affect the cure for cancer," she said.

the service.

Akeia Rossiter, United Black Voices member, sang "Amazing Grace" as 32 candles were lit around her.

The focus of the crowd was not on the number of candles or chimes, however, but on the healing taking place.

Merrilee Wuthnow, senior in life sciences, said she liked the service, even though the turn-. out was less than she expected. Large pieces of paper were posted in the K-State Student Union throughout the week to allow students and others walking through the Union the opportunity to write a message to the Virginia Tech community. Wuthnow said sending the banner to the victims of the shootings was a great idea.

"Even though we can't understand what they are going through, we still have them in our thoughts and prayers," Wuthnow said.

Aisha Salazar, graduate student in food science and Virginia tech alumna, spoke about the similarities between K-State and Virginia Tech. She said she did not know anyone killed but recognized some victims' faces.

"Some of my close friends lost close friends," Salazar said.

The service ended with a benediction from Fallon and the chiming of the bells.

BARBECUE | Teams from across Midwest attend, compete in contest; 66 judges select, announce winners

"My theory is that the sauce is for flavor," he said. "It's not to make it taste good. It just adds some kick to it. Meat should stand alone, and my rubs do that."

Bauer's wife, Billy, was the Beaux Hawgs' official food stylist for the competition. She worked with leaf lettuce and parsley, the only two items allowed for decorations, to present the

She said it was a balance not to take attention away from the meat.

After submitting the final entries, teams cleaned up and waited.

"We could take first place, we could take last. You just never know," Billy Bauer said. "One of the hardest things for us to learn was how to cook to everyone's taste, not just ours."

Seventeen amateur teams also got the opportunity to compete by grilling babyback ribs for the judges.

"The tailgate division is for backyard cooks," said Gary Davidson, event coordinator. "A lot of guys might be intimidated by having to do it all so we just give them some ribs to cook, let them turn them in and have fun."

After two hours, the 66 judges announced the winners. The Rib Pirates won the tailgate division and Albert's Ash-Kickin' Barbecue earned the state champion title and an invitation to the American Royal Barbecue Contest in October in Kansas City, Mo.

The Beaux Hawgs placed ninth in brisket and seventh overall. Kelly Bauer said the team was pretty pleased with how it did and looked forward to competing in next year's contest.

Competition entrants and observers said they enjoyed the competition.

"It is a great event that brings people from around the Midwest," said Jeff Scott, senior in hotel and restaurant. management and the Beaux Hawgs' apprentice.

Zoo events educate visitors about Earth Day, 'Go Green'

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A tornado watch did little to dissuade people from making a trip to Sunset Zoological Park on Sunday to celebrate Earth Day 2007.

In celebration of Earth Day, the zoo had attractions set up all around its grounds. The event also served as the debut for the zoo's "Go Green" pro-

The goal of "Go Green" is to involve area businesses, schools and homes in active roles in taking care of the environment.

Rachel Soash, curator of education for the zoo, was signing people up for the program Sunday.

"We will have special events throughout the year for 'Go Green' members," Soash said.

She said the target audience for the day was businesses and organizations, but homeowners were allowed to sign up as Lists of the steps people must complete before they become certified in the "Go Green" program were available at the table.

Soash said when businesses or schools sign up for the program, the zoo will call them from time to time to make sure they are following the steps, which include providing boxes for recycling bottles, aluminum cans and newspa-

Another table gave away compact fluorescent light bulbs that use a quarter of the energy used by traditional incandescent bulbs.

Volunteers of all ages were present, helping educate zoo visitors. Taryn Osborny, fifthgrader at Manhattan Catholic School, helped people make butterfly farms.

"We gave away 60 farms today, and that was more than we expected," Osborny said.

The T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter had a table set up between the monkey exhibit and the petting zoo to show people how their animals affect the environment.

Lainen Sommers, animal technician at the shelter, said cats should be kept inside for their safety.

"Cats should especially be kept inside if they are declawed," Sommers said.

She also said if cats are not de-clawed early in life, they should not be de-clawed at

The Friends of Sunset Zoo had a table near the entrance, where memberships to the zoo were available for purchase. Verlyn Richards, treasurer of Friends, explained the special relationship the society has with the zoo.

"The City of Manhattan does not pay for the zoo's employees to go to professional seminars," Richards said.

She said most of the revenue received from Friends memberships goes toward sending zoo employees to an assortment of seminars so the zoo can maintain accreditathe game's first points went on the scoreboard midway through the first quarter.

After its first drive resulted in a 3-and-out, the Purple team was set to punt the ball away from its own 20-yard line. The problem was punter Cole Brokenicky never got the snap from center Sean Kolich, who sent the ball sailing over the punter's head and into the end zone. The play resulted in a safety.

"We had a bad snap," Prince said. "We had some poor decisions on fielding the ball."

Wide receivers Matt Wykes and Toney Coleman scored the game's only touchdowns, 16-yard and five-yard receptions, respectively. Kicker Jared Parker converted on a 50-yard field goal in the third quarter and was impressive on kickoffs. He recorded three touchbacks in four tries.

FAN FEST | Fan Fest does little to improve Spring Game atmosphere

You've got to give Prince credit for doing his best to make the Spring Game a fanfriendly experience.

He instituted the Spring Game draft, which added a bit of legitimate excitement to an otherwise ho-hum event.

Then Prince transformed the annual scrimmage into the Spring Game Fan Fest, complete with a Ferris wheel, barbecue cook-off, petting zoo, demolition derby, quilting bee, fashion show and ABBA cover band. Still, it felt remotely like putting a bow on a, well, you know the expression. It's enough to make one long for simpler days, when the price of admission was a bar of soap and the players ran wind sprints after the scrimmage.

Fortunately, fans can take comfort that a lousy spring game doesn't mean much about the season to come.

And as one sportswriter pointed out, we can thank Prince for one innovation guaranteed to make the Spring Game a better experience for all involved: the running clock.

Prairie heat

Above: Erik Dill, Manhattan resident and December graduate, drags a torch through a dry field as flames rush up the hill behind him. Most of the fields are burned in the spring, and the rain that follows helps the grass grow back with new nutrients. Below: Dill walks away as fire begins to spread up the hill off Pillsbury Crossing Road. When burning fields, he said one must be aware of the direction the smoke will move, so it does not blow onto roads.

Field burnings help maintain Kansas grasslands, keep other organisms from dominating the area

By Andrew Levalley
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Contrary to popular belief, Kansas does have an ocean. Rather than an ocean of water, however, the state has an ocean of grass. Across the 8,600 acres of Konza Prairie Preserve, the wind blows through tallgrass, making it move like the tide.

What many people do not realize is the tallgrass prairie is its own ecosystem. However, it still requires maintenance from prairie experts to keep certain organisms from taking over the prairie, specifically the red cedar.

To keep such organisms at bay, professionals use a simple technique – fire.

"We would really like people to understand the importance of burning to the prairie-land," said Valerie Wright, education director for the Konza Prairie Biological Station. "It wouldn't be the same if we didn't do it."

Eva Horne, interim director of the Konza Prairie Preserve, said professionals use the ring method to burn.

"We have four vehicles placed around the site," Horne said. "You start (the fire) downwind and allow the wind to carry the fire. The fire creeps in and widens out, making a nice, black area. It's tough to do safely, and conditions have to be just right. We have a crew of at least a dozen people made up of graduate students, but mostly volunteers."

Activity at a burning can be both heart-pounding and calm.

"Sometimes things get a little frantic," Wright said. "But sometimes, things get quiet, and you get to just watch as the fire burns across the prairie."

According to the Konza Environmental Education Program Web site, the wind must be blowing at a minimum of 5 mph – but no more than 15 mph

ISC director re-assigned, given notice

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The director of K-State's International Student Center received a reassignment with the university after a meeting with the Office of International Programs Friday.

Donna Davis was reassigned to serve as the director of International Alumni Relations and Development, effective May 1. She also was given one year's notice of termination of services from the university. Davis said she was given no reasoning from administration for her re-assignment.

Kristine Young, Office of International Programs administrative director, confirmed Davis' re-assignment but declined to comment further.

Davis said she came to K-State as a graduate assistant at ISC in 1977. She became a full-time employee in 1981.

Seiji Ikeda, graduate student in fine arts, was present at Friday's meeting regarding Davis' re-assignment. Afterward, Ikeda said Young and Kenneth Holland, professor and associate provost for international programs, told him and other concerned students a search committee will be formed to find a qualified replacement.

"I was personally shocked and in disbelief with the information that was provided, or lack thereof," Ikeda said. "A lot of the answers that we have gotten are questionable and rather decorated with fancy wording and fancy reasons."

Student organizations and faculty members are collecting petition signatures and requesting a formal investigation into the matter, Ikeda said. Several students will present the signatures at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

Students drafted a letter to the provost's office regarding the re-assignment, and Ikeda said he and others are working to set up an appointment with Provost M. Duane Nellis. Students created a Web site, www.supportdonna.com, to raise awareness about Davis' re-assignment. Students also started a Facebook.com group, "Do You Know Donna." More than 100 people had joined the group as of Monday afternoon.

Calls to K-State's Division of Human Resources regarding termination conditions were not immediately returned.

KANSAS SINIE COLLEG

Teams of fraternities and sororities competed in events like tug of war and Hula-Hoop relays at Memorial Stadium as part of the Greek Olympics Monday night.

Participating students were divided into five tribes, like on the TV show "Survivor." The teams wore different colored shirts and competed in various events, including water-balloon launches, water-bucket relays and orange-chin relays.

The tribes will compete in other events throughout the week, and the team that finishes with the most points will win a prize.

This was the first event of the annual Greek Week, said Alison Hennigh, junior in public relations and member of Pi Beta Phi sorority and the Greek Week planning committee.

The theme this year is "Survivor," and the motto is "Who will be the last tribe standing?"

Invitations were sent to all greek members on campus. Though not every fraternity or sorority was represented, most houses were represented by at least a few, said Chelsea L'Ecuyer, sophomore in accounting, member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and the planning committee.

Michelle LeCluyse, adviser to the Greek Week steering committee and member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, planned most of the event with the help of an elected planning committee that included about 12 people from different greek houses.

"Really we just want to foster working together as a team with different chapters," said LeCluyse, senior in biology. The group began planning the event in February.

The proceeds from the week will go to the Manhattan/Ogden school district.

"The last couple of years we have chosen a philanthropy we want to benefit," LeCluyse said. Last year the benefits went to the Humane Society.

LeCluyse said another goal is to bring the greek community together and make Greek Week as fun and exciting as All-University Homecoming.

"We're trying to restructure Greek Week so it's more exciting for people of all ages," she said.

Princeton professor explains theoretical evolutionary views

By Scott Girard KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Organisms can direct themselves to evolve and adapt to the changing environment, a professor from Princeton University said Monday afternoon in Cardwell 102.

Robert Austin, a physics professor, said this theory differs from most others, which claim evolutionary mutations happen at random. This can be nearly impossible to calculate, he said, much like other philosophical or psychological theories.

"Philosophy doesn't work with evolution," he said. "You need some sort of physiological research and evidence."

Austin said though the directive evolution theory is relatively untested and unproven, tests have been conducted that could prove its factual information.

Much of the research he has worked with measures how organisms respond to stress. He said to see if the organism is strong enough to survive in its habitat, it needs to be stressed. Many organisms evolve because of this stress, he said.

"Organisms are designed to evolve," he said. "And that makes the clock move much quicker."

As an example of directed evolution as opposed to random evolution, Austin cited the ability of viruses to mutate and become resistant to antibiotics at quick rates.

Austin also has shown support of the theory in several of his tests, which he said are designed to measure the evolution processes of organisms in several small communities but not in one large community.

"The experiment is optimal if you allow diversity," he said. "It is better for you to break things up in smaller parts."

Within small communities of bacteria, Austin said the populations that were allowed to establish smaller communities and still interact were much more genetically di-

He compared the bacterial communities to human populations. The bacteria flourished in areas where food was plentiful, but eventually the food ran out, and they had to evolve quickly to account for the sparsity of food. He said this is controlled best by forming many smaller communities, much like humans form cities and towns. He even joked the bacteria learn to hate other communities and have wars.

Austin admitted the theory was far from proven, and some audience members agreed. One observer, a selfproclaimed biologist, argued organisms cannot personally direct evolution because there is no mechanism or trigger for the mutation.

Austin refuted this statement by claiming all mutations cannot be explained by random occurrences and that some mutations must be di-

"It just feels right," Austin said. "There has to be some way to direct evolutions."

Austin emphasized his conclusions and experiments were strictly theoretical. He made several sarcastic jokes and drew several instances of laughter from a crowd of mostly K-State professors and students.

Austin said current technology has just begun to tap the true workings of evolution and there are many questions that still need to be answered about the theory of evolution.

"We are starting to ask some good questions," he said. "I believe technology is present now for us to answer these

He said in 10 years, evolutionary thinking will most likely change dramatically, mainly because of the developing prominence of nanotechnology, or single-atom,

Reps to discuss new student health insurance plan today in Union

By Sarah Nightingale KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can get a look at the new student health insurance plan today.

United Healthcare student resources representative Matthew Brinson will be on campus to present information on a new student health insurance policy that will be available at Kansas Board of Regents' universities this fall.

Brinson will speak in the K-State Student Union at 1:15 p.m. for graduate students and assistants and 3 p.m. for undergraduates and international students. All sessions will be followed by a 15- to 20-minute question-and-answer period.

The current policy, underwritten by the MEGA Life and Health Insurance Company, is a preferred provider organization plan that costs $876 per year and must be renewed annually.

In a PPO plan, the insurance company develops a network of healthcare providers who agree to charge less for caring for the company's policyholders.

Advantages of this plan include the guaranteed acceptance of students with preexisting conditions, though coverage begins eight months after enrollment. This plan has a deductible - the amount the policyholder must pay before the insurance kicks in - of

The maximum benefit paid per year is $100,000, which could be a problem for students who have a serious illness or major injury. Also, daily maximums are applied to some services, like a $300 daily limit for intensive care expenses. That's a small amount, considering typical intensive-care costs can hit $2,000-3,000 per day at some U.S. hospitals, according to an article in the American Journal of Respiratory and Critical Care Health Center. Medicine.

Finally, coverage ends at graduation, so students will need to find their own insurance once the caps are tossed in the air.

Becky Christner, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, is a policyholder of the student health in-

"I'm afraid to go to the doctor," Christner said. "You never know how much things will cost and how much you'll have to pay. The new policy doesn't look any better."

Student Resources Inc. will offer the new plan, which is also a PPO and costs $965 annually. This plan has a smaller deductible of $250 and the capped daily maximums for most services have been increased to 80-percent coverage in the preferred provider network, which includes Mercy Regional

This means that $800 of $1,000 intensive-care bill would be paid by the insurance, instead of $300 under the current policy.

Pre-existing conditions are not covered for nine months, the $100,000-per-year maximum payout remains the same. Coverage still ends with

Fred Brock, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and author of "Health Care on Less Than You Think," said both the old and new policies have serious shortcomings. He said the annual maximums were too low and criticized the policies for ending coverage upon gradua-

"This puts enormous pressure on students to get a job that has coverage right away, or forces them to find individual coverage," Brock said. "In too many cases, graduating students end up joining the ranks of the uninsured."

He recommended looking for private policies that offer coverage past graduation. He pointed to a range of student health insurance plans that can be found through www.ehealthinsurance.com, a health insurance Web site.

One plan for students without pre-existing conditions is the Time Company indemnity plan - a plan that reimburses students for medical services regardless of the provider which would cost about $864 per year for a non-smoking, 22-year-old male living in Manhattan. The deductible is $1,000, and after the deductible has been met, the co-insurance payment is just 20 percent. Coinsurance is the percentage of bills patients pay until an outof-pocket maximum has been met. For the Time plan, the outof-pocket maximum is $3,000 and includes the deductible.

This plan does not involve any co-payments and the lifetime maximum is $1 million more generous than the $100,000 offered annually through the state of Kansas policy. Another advantage of this plan is that it lasts until a policyholder turns 30, which gives students the option of taking some time off between graduation and employment.

Brinson could not be reached for comment.

TO THE POINT

New campus health insurance still has holes

Students often are told about the importance of having quality insurance, but sometimes finding the right health provider can be a challenge.

A new To the Point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the

A new student health insurance plan will be presented to students today, and although a choice is always an advantage to the average consumer, any policy needs to be viewed with a critical eye.

Collegian's official opinion.

The previous insurance plan had a lot of holes, including a slow start to coverage, a higher deductible and an extremely low benefit of $100,000. The new plan costs more annually, but offers a lower deductible and 80 percent coverage for medical bills.

But here's the rub.

The policy still does not begin covering policy holders with previous coverage for nine months, and the maximum benefit of $100,000 stays the same.

Although the new policy might have a few new benefits, it still has its failings.

Students experience the financial burden of a monthly deductible with little benefit, likely the reason many young people forego insurance altogether.

Insurance companies make it difficult for young people to be insured for a low cost and a high benefit. Although we might want to whine to university officials for not finding a better policy for students, the blame is better placed on the overall system and the inability of young people to be economically beneficial.

Fighting the system is difficult. Complaining to each other won't do much.

Instead, the goal is change, because we'll be the ones dealing with the system.

GOOD NEWS

Demands for 'positive' news undermine its purpose

DEWEESE

Allow me to put in a plug for journalists everywhere: the news is not always a cheerful industry.

A variety of topics receive coverage each day on aspects of life most don't like to think about — war, suicide, bombings, homicide and natural disasters, for starters. This shouldn't come as shocking news (pun intended) to anyone; however, the point bears repeating.

As much as it pains me to say it, the world is an ugly place. Awful things happen every hour, and as a journalist, it is my responsibility and my commitment to report on these events.

Journalists have a special — and challenging — responsibility in maintaining a balance of "hard" news with lightweight features. This balance is tricky, and there is not a specific formula in maintaining it.

Or so I thought.

Managers of Russia's largest independent radio news network, the Russian News Service, recently had their first meeting with journalists since taking over the network, and their message was clear: from here on out, at least 50 percent of the news reports about Russia must be "positive."

In addition, opposition leaders cannot be mentioned on the air, and the United States is to be portrayed as an enemy, according to a Saturday report in The New York Times.

The distinction between positive and negative news is blurry, and one of personal opinion. An editor at the station, who remained anonymous in The Times' report out of fear of retribution, said negative news is talk of death, violence or poverty. Positive news, the editor said, are items like the stock market going up or nice weather.

Russia's parliament is considering the extension of state control to Internet sites that report news, according to the report. Russia's three national TV networks already are state-controlled, while small-circulation newspapers generally remain independent, according to the report.

I can picture the managers at the radio station sitting with a pencil and a list of the week's upcoming news stories, making tallies in the "positive" column and hoping for fewer marks in the "negative" column.

As an insider of the news world, allow me to share a secret: it's not that simple. News does not come to newsrooms or broadcast stations in a package with!" labels.

All journalists face the responsibility of reporting on "negative" and disheartening topics. In my short two years as a journalist, I've covered a motorcycle wreck, a fraternity facing sanctions for an unregistered party and a variety of other "unhappy" topics.

But as news consumers, it is important to realize the distinction between hard facts and potential fluffy propaganda. Even with the First Amendment and a supposedly free press, the United States is not completely clear of disinformation.

Furthermore, this country has an obsession with negative news. When a tragedy occurs, it is on every cable TV news network and large metropolitan newspaper.

The whole purpose of consuming news is to learn the facts and make an educated decision about how the event shapes your life. Which is why, as reporters and as consumers, it is essential to know what is positive, what is negative and then forget these labels.

Several factors could have prevented Va. Tech killings

As any good liberal would say, mentally unstable individuals are not accountable for their actions. If this is true, outside factors must be blamed for the shooting at Virginia Tech University last week.

Though Cho Seung-Hui ultimately pulled the trigger, the top three entities responsible for the shootings are the university administration, the federal government and the Virginia state government.

BRETT

KING

First, the university administration failed to act appropriately.

With Cho's extensive list of campus violations, one has to wonder what it takes to get kicked off a college campus.

During his time at Virginia Tech, Cho stalked female students and even set a fire in his dorm room. In addition, The Washington Post reported teachers and students did not want him present in their classes. English teachers said his writings disturbed many students.

Cho's one-act play, "Richard McBeef," is about a 13 year-old boy who falsely accuses his step-father of being a pedophile and killing his biological father. After the accusation, the boy's mother goes after the step-father with a chain saw. The play ends with the step-father killing the young boy.

We should credit the school administration for trying to get Cho help through counseling, but he should have been forced to leave the school for his criminal actions prior to the shooting.

On the federal level, Cho's mental health information could not be shared with his parents because it would be a violation of the Heath Insurance Portability and Accountability Act. Under HIPPA's privacy rule, a patient's medical history and method of payment are kept secret from outside sources if the patient is older than 18.

This law kept Cho's parents from knowing their son's mental health state while he was away at school. If they had been made aware of the situation, his parents could have brought him home to receive treatment.

But the largest amount of blame has to be placed on the Virginia state government.

House Bill 1572, which would have granted conceal-and-carry rights for students, faculty and other campus employees at all Virginia colleges and universities, died in the committee stage in January. The bill even addressed many additional worries by maintaining restrictions on firearms at residence halls and sporting events.

Conceal-and-carry permit holders in Virginia are required to check their weapons with the police and campus security before entering campus.

After the bill was defeated,
Virginia Tech spokesman Larry
Hincker told the Roanoke Times,
"I'm sure the university community is appreciative of the General Assembly's actions because this will help parents, students, faculty and visitors feel safe on our campus."

Talk about the ultimate foot in the mouth.

After recognizing the factors that contributed to the situation in Virginia, we can fix the problems that allowed Cho to slip under the radar by prosecuting students who break laws and not allowing mental instability as a defense.

Cho broke three laws – unlawful possession of a firearm on campus, failing to check weapons with campus police and unlawful possession of a firearm without a conceal-and-carry permit. Many have called for more gun-control laws as a method of preventing a situation like this from occurring again, but increased gun-control laws are not a solution until we can enforce the laws currently on the books.

Firearms are not to blame for this tragedy, but rather the laws and policies that kept Cho in school.

MISSING A CHANCE

THE ARAB NEWS EDITORIAL

If the 5-month-old cease-fire between the Palestinians and Israel is broken, one should look no further than Saturday's killing of eight Palestinians in an Israeli military push across the West Bank and Gaza Strip for the reason.

Israel will call its latest actions necessary in the wake of missile attacks on its southern cities.

But can the shooting of a Palestinian policeman, simply for watching an Israeli arrest operation from his rooftop, be considered necessary?

Should the death of a 17-yearold Palestinian girl shot by Israeli troops as she stood at a window in her house be called necessary?

These incidents could easily shatter the truce.

The new national unity government recognizes Israel's right to exist and forgoes violence – conditions essential for talks about a viable Palestinian state adjoining Israel.

It is pushing for a two-state solution – it wants a Palestinian state alongside Israel and not instead of it.

Israel, for its part, does not appear to want to discuss anything.

SEX ED

Sexual health advice from the experts at SHAPE

Living with HIV

By Matt Combes SEXUAL HEALTH AWARENESS PEER EDUCATORS

This week's column will take a slightly different approach. I was given the opportunity to interview a young man who contracted HIV approximately two years ago. Understand this is just a short glimpse into a striking story. His name has been changed for privacy purposes.

John grew up in a small northern Kansas town. To escape small-town life, he moved to Colorado. After about two years he had a great job and had met a guy he was "crazy about." They took precautions by practicing safe sex and getting tested. After six months of clean results, they felt they were safe. After relationship issues, they were on and off again until they went their separate ways.

"About 3-4 months after the break-up I came down with what I thought was the worst flu virus I had ever experienced," John recalled. "My whole body ached ... I would go from cold chills to dripping wet from sweat and the pain from even blinking my eyes was unbearable."

John was unknowingly suffering from Acute HIV Syndrome. Soon the symptoms ended.

Then John started getting a rash just under his jaw that began draining pus. His doctor said there was a Syphilis outbreak that could be causing his rash. John decided to be tested for HIV as well as other sexually transmitted diseases

When John went back for his results, he remembered, "We were just chatting away, waiting for the negative result of the rapid HIV test to come back. When the 20-minute alarm went off, (the testing facilitator) looked at the result ... I will never get the look on her face out of my head as a tear rolled down her cheek. It took a minute to realize exactly what had just been revealed to me: HIV positive. I held it together until I left her office. Once I made my way into the elevator, I completely broke down. I thought my life was over, and that it was just a waiting game now."

John frequently was in and out of the Infectious Disease Center the first couple weeks, running numerous tests and getting vaccinations for diseases like hepatitis.

John's lab test results were encouraging. His immune system (or CD4 count) was up, while the number of viruses in his system was low.

Mentally, however, John was falling apart. This caused his health status to decline. He lost 20 pounds and developed the possibility of kidney problems. The doctor told him if his health didn't improve, he might need dialysis. As John recalls, "That's when it hit me ... I knew what happens to you when you are put on dialysis. You don't last too long."

About six months following his diagnosis, John started medication treatment also known as "drug cocktails." He has been making the upward climb ever since. John has not been diagnosed with AIDS.

"My last visit resulted in the best numbers since diagnosis, and I have been having the time of my life," he said. "I still have many ups and downs and am still dealing with it from day to day. It only takes a single time of having unprotected sex, heterosexual or homosexual, to change your life. You owe it to yourself and your partner to get tested."

Remember, it's not who you are but what you do that puts you at risk for HIV or other sexually transmitted diseases.

For the competition, Rupe entered his 7-minute, 6-second film titled "Jacky Boy." Rupe co-wrote, co-directed and acted in the short feature. His partner in creating the film was high school friend Alex Brand, a student at the University of Kansas.

Rupe said the movie's story line includes a hunting trip, murder and a twist at the film's finale.

"A lot happens in the short seven minutes of the movie," Rupe said. "It could maybe be confusing for some people, but I still think that most everyone should follow it pretty well."

As of now, Rupe has yet to hear back from Fox. And in contrast to the old expression, Rupe said he feels that no news is probably bad

But while Rupe has doubts of his film making the cut, he said his short feature is still available for viewing on the show's Web site. And Rupe is encouraging people to check it out.

"I really want feedback from viewers," Rupe said. "I plan on entering more films for competition in the future, and I want to know where I need to improve."

Rupe's enthusiasm for filmmaking isn't a recently emerging hobby. The Wichita native said he got his start in filmmaking in junior high, doing camera work for commercials with local companies like Chit Chat Wireless, KAKE-TV and Spangles. (Rupe strongly declared he had no say in the commercials' content.) From there, Rupe said he spent much of his spare time in high school creating amateur films with friends.

Rupe's choice to attend K-State might seem odd, considering KU has a film school just 85 miles east on Interstate 70. However, he said KU was never an option.

"There's no way in hell I would go to KU," Rupe said, laughing. "I've bled purple for way too long to go to that place."

Instead, Rupe said he plans to stay at K-State for one more year and then transfer to California State University at North Ridge, which has a film school.

But regardless of where Rupe finishes his education, he said filmmaking always will be a part of his life.

"The ultimate goal for me is to produce and direct feature films one day," Rupe said. "But until then I'll do anything and try a little bit of everything just get the experience I

"Myth Takes" is the third album from the dance-punk outfit based triply in Sacramento, Calif.; Portland, Ore.; and New York City. !!! (most commonly pronounced "Chk Chk Chk") follows up its breakthrough second album, "Louden Up Now," with a less political, more cohesive affair. !!! is known for combining rock aesthetics with electronic beats and styles; it often creates a groove upon which countless electronic flourishes, percussive instruments and blaring horns are piled. One can tell Murphy has grown tremendously as an artist and producer - "Sound of Silver" is perhaps the best amalgamation between the ideology of rock and electronica. One hardly can tell whether they are listening to a guitar or some processed synthesizer, but it hardly matters as "Sound of Silver" rocks and moves the hips in equal measure. A brilliant effort from a brilliant artist, James Murphy has proven his talent again on "Sound of Silver."

K-State tied for 7th place in golf tourney

By Trenton Clifton KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After the first day of the Big 12 Conference tournament, the K-State men's golf team is tied with Baylor for seventh place, shooting a +45.

Though the Wildcats are in the bottom half of the leaderboard, they have a good opportunity to move up as they are only one stroke behind both Missouri and Oklahoma, which both shot +44 for their overall team scores.

Freshman Joe Ida, who has a membership at Prairie Dunes Country Club in Hutchinson, Kan., where the tournament is taking place, shot +8 to pace the Wildcats. Senior Joe Kinney was not far behind as he shot +9, which was second best on the team.

"Ida and Kinney both had really good performances," said coach Tim Norris. "Kinney did a great job for his first time playing here.

"This is a tough, tough golf course. It's a top-30 golf course in the world, you have to hit some great shots just to Freshman Mitchell Gregson shot a +14, giving him the third-best score for K-State. Sophomore Robert Streb and junior Kyle Yonke both shot +15.

Oklahoma State, which is ranked ninth in the Sagarin/Golfweek rankings, led the field, shooting +19 as a team. No. 12 Texas A&M is not far behind after shooting +24 for the day. Texas, which is ranked No. 27, is in third place with a score of +31.

Through the first day of the tournament, the four teams in the Sagarin/ Golfweek rankings - Oklahoma State, Texas A&M, Texas, and Texas Tech - are at the top of the leaderboard.

Early in the day, the Wildcats found themselves in ninth place. However, consistent and steady play allowed them to move up two spots.

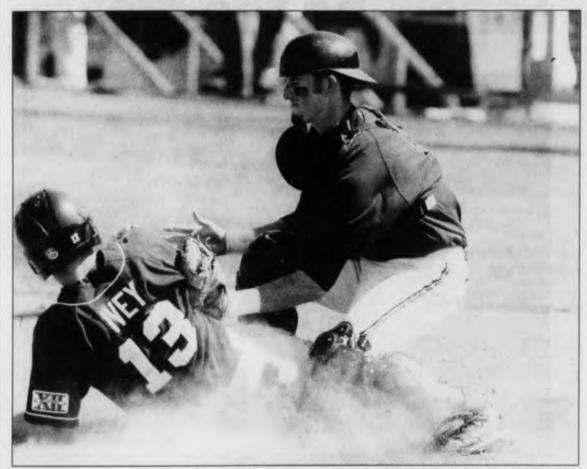

While the Wildcats have a realistic chance of moving up to fifth, the fourth spot will be tough to reach as Texas Tech shot +35, which is 10 strokes better than the Wildcats.

"Our guys came into the tournament wanting to finish in the top five, and I think we have a good chance,"

After two-straight 10th-place finishes in the Big 12 Tournament, one can see Norris has improved the team.

"We have a good group of young guys, and I think down the road we are going to have a pretty good squad," Norris said.

By Dayne Logan KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team (25-15) makes a trip to Wichita for a 7 p.m. showdown with in-state rival Wichita State (34-9) at Eck Stadium.

The Shockers, winners of four straight, enter the game ranked seventh in the nation.

K-State, on the other hand, has lost seven of its last 10.

The game will mark the second meeting between the two teams this season, with Wichita State winning the first leg 8-3 in Manhattan. In that game, the Shockers fell behind early but made a comeback by holding the Wildcats scoreless after the second inning.

While Wichita State has become quite adept at shutting down its opposition, K-State has found that same task difficult to accomplish of late.

The Wildcats have surrendered an average of 10.2 runs per game during their last five games and allowed 20 and 12 runs, respectively, in their two most recent games against Oklahoma.

While errors have played a part, coach Brad Hill said he was becoming concerned with the mentality of his pitching staff.

If Fugett can get the same sort run support to which the rest of Wichita State's pitching staff has become accustomed, that decision could come soon.

The Shockers enter the game with a team batting average of .303 and four individuals hitting better than .340. Additionally, Wichita K-State's Eddie Vasquez lays down a bunt late in the game Friday. K-State won the first game of the series, but lost Saturday and Sunday.

State has plenty of long-ball capability with 12 players recording home runs this season.

Despite K-State's recent problems on the mound, the bats have remained hot. The team is hitting .293 and has 10 players above the 280 mark Unfortunately, consistency up and down the batting order has been difficult to attain.

That consistency will need to be regained if K-State hopes to upset the Shockers on their home field

FBN | Bush lauds Manning, Colts for showing heart

WASHINGTON - Even when football season ends, quarterback Peyton Manning is hard to miss on television. He has become such a marketable pitchman that his commercials a sports drink here, a credit card company there - seem endless. Apparently, President Bush has taken notice while flipping the channels

Manning

"So a lot of people here in the White House compound have been really looking forward to seeing Peyton Manning," Bush said Monday on the South Lawn. "They wanted to see a guy who gets more airtime than I do.'

The good-natured poke came as Bush welcomed another championship team to the White House: the Indianapolis Colts.

The Colts beat the Chicago Bears, 29-17, in a pounding rainstorm last February to become Super Bowl champs. Monday, players basked in the sunshine as Bush hailed them for ignoring naysayers and playing as a well-balanced team.

The team's coach, Tony Dungy, became the first black coach to win a Super Bowl. Dungy coped with the suicide of his son, James, in late 2005. Bush alluded to that.

"He is a man who has used his - a position of notoriety to behave in a quiet and strong way in the face of personal tragedy that has influenced a lot of our fellow citizens," Bush said of Dungy, who stood next to him on stage. "And I want to thank you for your courage."

The Colts are used to getting showered with attention. More than 93 million people watched the Super Bowl. Yet the team's players and executives seemed awed to be at the White House, and they didn't hide it.

Players pulled out cameras to get photos with Bush. They did the same with another political star who showed up for the ceremony - Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice.

Earlier, players visited injured troops at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. Manning, Dungy and a handful of others also got a 20-minute tour of the Oval Office from Bush.

"Winning the Super Bowl a few months ago was probably about as special as you could get," Manning said. "But I'm not sure you could actually beat what's happened here today."

As for all those commercials, Manning said he's used to getting ribbing from teammates. All Bush did, he said, was provide "more ammo for the offensive line to have some fun with me."

When Prince took over as coach, he inherited a team that had four quarterbacks on the roster. Then he added Freeman, his prize recruit, to raise the total to five. However, by the time the regular season rolled around in September, that number had been whittled

First to go was Lopina. Next up were Allen Webb and Allan Evridge, two quarterbacks who combined to take all the snaps a year earlier.

> Lopina said he and Evridge saw their repetitions get cut, and that they weren't getting an equal chance to prove themselves. In a way, he said, Prince left them no other choice but to leave.

"I guess you could say that coach Prince kind of ran us out," Lopina

Prince can't do that to every quarterback who wants to challenge Freeman for the starting job. He shouldn't be Freeman's shield and armor

After Saturday's Spring Game, Prince did not offer praise for Freeman's stinker of a game. Then again, how could he?

What struck me is that he did not offer many reasons for Freeman's poor performance, nor did it seem that he was holding Freeman accountable. It appears as if the starting job belongs to Freeman - no matter what - and that there's no debating it. That's how Lopina saw it too.

I don't know if many fans will have a problem with that. But one gets the impression that Coffman might.

Following his Spring Game performance, Coffman sounded intent on competing for the starting job. He said he felt his showing helped him in the race for the starting posi-

"I think I made a statement," said Coffman, who doesn't hide his competitive spirit. "I'm definitely not going to concede to Josh."

Lopina did not want to either, but he had no choice and decided to transfer. Evridge did the same. The race against Freeman was one they could not win. Prince threw in the towel for them.

It makes you wonder if Freeman truly does operate by a different set of rules than his teammates. If that's the case it's only a matter of time before the locker room is divided.

One player should not be granted immunity when an entire team is subject to losing their starting spots.

Freeman is a better quarterback than Coffman, but I'd still rather see him prove it under intense pressure. He needs to be pushed, not protected. Let the best man win.

After all, that's what open competition is all about. It provides for competitive tension and brings out the best in players.

Prince's words, not mine.

IRANIAN PRESIDENT OFFERS TO HAVE TALKS WITH PRESIDENT BUSH

TEHRAN, Iran - Iran's hard-line president proposed Monday to hold public talks with President Bush on a wide range of issues, without saying whether that included international suspicions of the Iranian nuclear program or allegations of Iranian meddling in Iraq.

The Iranian leader did not elaborate on what specifically he was willing to discuss with the U.S. president, but he said the talks "should be held with media present."

It was not immediately clear if Iran's supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who has the final say in all state matters, supported Ahmadinejad's proposal.

ISRAEL READY TO MAKE 'PAINFUL CONCESSIONS' FOR PALESTINIAN PEACE

JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Ehud Olmert marked Israel's Memorial Day for fallen soldiers Monday with a new call for peace with the Palestinians, saying his country was prepared to make "farreaching compromises" and "very painful concessions."

But he also said Israel would hit militants "until they are destroyed," following a weekend of fighting that left nine Palestinians dead.

Speaking at a nationally televised ceremony, Olmert said the country owed it to its fallen soldiers to continue efforts to achieve the peace."

ABUJA, Nigeria - A former chemistry professor and provincial governor handpicked by President Olusegun Obasanjo won the presidential election in a landslide Monday, in a vote denounced as deeply flawed by international observers and the opposition.

Umaru Yar'Adua must now fight for credibility in Nigeria, where some 15,000 people have died since strict military rule ended in 1999.

Gen. Muhammadu Buhari, the 1980s-era military leader who was the runnerup in Saturday's vote, called the outcome "the most blatantly rigged election results ever produced in Nigeria."

Intramural wallyball provides indoor alternative to volleyball

By Brie Handgraaf KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who want to play volleyball but don't have enough players can try a spinoff: wallyball.

"Wallyball is a variation of volleyball played in a racquetball court with two players on each team," said Alex Foltz, junior in marketing. "The ball is played off the walls, which you can use to your advantage."

Foltz and David Hembree, senior in mathematics, are on the men's club volleyball team and said it was a natural transition to begin playing wallyball.

Hembree said he first became interested in the sport during his sophomore year at K-State, when a friend invited him to play on an intramural

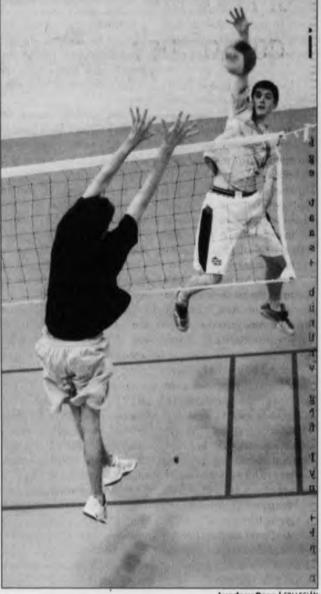

Each spring semester, Peters Recreation Complex offers intramurals for doubles wallyball.

John Wondra, assistant director of recreational services, said 17 teams competed this year in the men's, women's and co-ed divisions. Fewer teams competed this year than in the past because interest in wallyball is waning, he said.

This year, Hembree and his team won the men's division, and he also competed in the co-ed division.

"There is a lot more strategy involved than most people think, especially if you are playing correctly," he said. "Typically, girls are better setters than hitters, at least on a men's net, and men are better hitters then setters. So if you serve to the girl, then the guy will be forced to set it back to the girl."

Other students play the game more as a social event than for competition. Michael Marlen, graduate student in computer science, said he first learned about wallyball as a freshman and plays whenever he gets a chance. He said the setting for wallyball games suits him better than traditional volleyball.

"Let's just say I'm not K-State's No. 1 volleyball player," he said. "I do more volleyball chasing, so a small, closedoff court is ideal."

Even though traditional teams have two players, Marlen said he plays with an average of five players per team. As long as a court is open, all students have to do to rent the equipment is show a student ID Wallyball equipment is free to

"If you and your friends are sitting around with nothing to do, give wallyball a shot," Marlen said.

Group battles compulsive eating disorder

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Editor's note: the names of the women quoted in this story were changed to protect their identities as their group meets under condition of anonymity.

"Hello. My name is Susan. and I am a compulsive overeater."

Susan, a 45-year-old woman, has attended Overeaters Anonymous meetings since June 2002.

Members of OA begin their sharing session of the meetings with the same statement, admitting to the group - and themselves - they are a compulsive eater.

"There is a saying in OA, that it's a simple program," Susan said. "It may not be easy, but it's simple, and that's basically what it takes to (recover)."

Susan said the only requirement for membership is a desire to stop eating compulsive-

According to OA literature, the group "believes that compulsive overeating is an illness - a progressive illness - which cannot be cured but which, like many other illnesses, can be arrested."

Susan said she has attended OA meetings in different towns and recently helped revive the Manhattan group.

The Manhattan chapter meets every other week but is making a transition to weekly meetings. The group is not religiously based, she said, but it is Six members make up the core of the Manhattan group, and they are men and women who range in age from their late 20s to 60s, Susan said.

"People come when they have hit the bottom," she said. "Something has finally happened, and they have said 'I can't do this. I need some help."

Each meeting has a traditional format that includes reading a serenity prayer and reviewing the 12 steps and 12 traditions of OA.

"It just kind of reminds everybody of what it is that works," Susan said.

Step one of the program is admitting to being powerless over food, Susan said, and admitting that one's life has become unmanageable.

There are different formats the group can follow for the rest of the meeting, including a sharing session and a book study, Susan said.

According to the OA Web site, www.oa.org, the group has no dues or fees for membership and is anonymous to allow the fellowship to govern itself through principles rather than personalities

Susan said there are a variety of eating plans suggested through OA literature, but members eat different foods based on their needs.

"Nobody in OA is going to say you have to eat such-andsuch meals," she said.

She said members look at their eating history and see if there are any types of foods that trigger overeating.

"There's no specific diet,

According to the Overeaters Anonymous Web site, there are questions people can ask themselves to help determine if they are a compulsive eater.

- Do you eat when you are not hungry?
   Do you go on eating binges for no apparent reason?
   Do you have feelings of guilt and remorse after overeating?
- Do you give too much time and thought to food?
   Do you look forward with pleasure and anticipation to the time when you can and it is going to be different for everybody," Susan said. "Some people have certain substances or foods they have to stay away from, just like alcoholics have to stay away from alcohol."

Linda, a 53-year-old woman, has attended the Manhattan OA meetings for three

"I've always known that if I eat sugar, it doesn't affect me the way that it does other people," Linda said. "It makes me hungrier for more. One piece of candy and I feel like I'm starving."

Linda said she has struggled with eating disorders most of her life and has tried many different weight-loss plans.

But whenever she stopped one of the plans, she always regained most of the weight.

"But now I'm back on track, and I'm really glad to have found this group," she said. "This time, I don't obsess about food. I know what I need to stay away from.

"I want to eat healthy, but I don't think about it."

Susan said she has tried several weight-loss plans through the years, but nothing worked for her. She later heard about the OA 12-step program and located a meeting through the

"When I walked in, I felt at home," she said. "I heard people talk about food in a way that I could understand.

"As long I could remember, people said 'well, just push your self away from the table,' use willpower, 'just stop eating.' I don't know how to describe it, but that was impossible for me."

Since her first OA meeting. Susan has lost 118 pounds.

"I have that serenity of not obsessing from the time I get out of my bed until bed time," Susan said. "'What am I going to eat?' 'How much?' 'I wonder if I can eat it before anybody gets home?' I am free of that obsession."

According to the Web site, two women founded OA in 1960 after one of the women. Rozanne, heard about the 12 steps through a Gamblers Anonymous meeting she attended with a friend.

She was able to relate her food behavior to the compulsion the members described about their gambling habits.

Now, the group has meetings in more than 65 coun-

City to contemplate dangerous dog policy

By Willow Williamson KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city commission will discuss a potential dangerous dog ordinance at a work session tonight in City Hall.

This is one of a series of meetings about Manhattan's changing policies regarding dangerous dogs.

The most recent step came during the April 3 commission meeting, where the commissioners changed the definition of "dangerous dogs" and created specific penalties for not complying with the ordinance.

During the meeting, commissioners also formed the dangerous dogs task force to conduct further research on the more controversial points of the issue, specifically leash laws and breed-specific laws.

At tonight's meeting, the task force will propose changes to the "dogs at large" section of the current ordi-

Brian Williams, management intern, said according to current law, owners must keep their dogs on a leash or under some other sort of control. This is generally referred to as the "voice command" provision, he said.

'The problem is, we don't have a leash law in Manhattan," Williams said. The law allows for any kind of con-

The task force will propose to eliminate the provision allowing voice control of a dog, requiring owners to keep their dogs on leashes.

with this is that owners will have much less freedom with their dogs. "If you have a leash law,

Williams said the problem people can't do things like play Frisbee in the City Park," he said.

In response to this problem, the task force suggested the city make enclosed dog parks where dogs could run without leashes, according to city staff.

Breed-specific laws are another point of debate regarding the ordinance. Williams said according to the current ordinance, a dog is not dangerous until it actually commits a violent act.

"Until the dog bites somebody, the city won't do anything about it," he said.

Having breed-specific laws would not be good, Williams said, because there are good pit bull terriers and Rottweilers, breeds commonly targeted by breed specific laws.

"We're trying to find a middle ground," Williams

The task force is suggesting a tracking program to keep the number of unlicensed dogs down and promote more educational opportunities for the public. Members of the task force also want to create and promote more dangerous-dog training opportunities for owners.

Williams said these measures are being taken because the public is more aware of the issue. He said the issue gained prominence after an incident a couple years ago when two pit bulls were loose on the grounds of a Manhattan elementary school.

More recently, he said, a pit bull was loose on the grounds of a local school last Thursday. It bit one child and an adult who was trying to get it away from the Lee Elementary School playground.

BURNING | Docents educate public on Konza's natural habitat

 to burn. The direction of the wind also is important, because the smoke cannot blow across roads.

Though much of the Konza is burned, some remains untouched.

"Currently, we have about 60 sites that we burn," Horne said.

The majority of the grasses are burned in the spring. Spring showers help the prairie grow back with new nutrients and shade of green.

Some people have the misconception that burning only happens in the spring, a myth that exists because of historical reasons, Wright said.

During the rainy season, lightning would strike the prairie, lighting it ablaze. American Indians burned prairies in the spring to attract bison.

"Basically, most of the burning is done from late March to late April, but also in the summer, fall, winter, as well as the spring," Wright said.

In addition to upkeep, the Konza Prairie Biological Station offers knowledge about the prairie to visitors.

"The education program is available to people of all ages," Wright said. "For adults, we mainly try to get them to appreciate the ecosystem. For students, it's about the science of the ecosystem."

Wright uses the help of 225 docents, or trained volunteers, to bring groups to the prairie.

"Usually, we bring anywhere from 4,000 to 5,000 people per year to Konza Prairie Preserve," she said.

Josh Yarrow, senior in civil engineering, said his family owns pasture near their home in Clay Center, Kan., which is leased through the Conservation Reserve Program.

The land is set aside for natural habitation, but the family burns the pasture once every several years to refresh

The land is about 1 mile by 1/2 mile, or a half-section, Yarrow said. When it is time to burn the pasture, he said his family takes extra precautions like calling the fire department. Friends and neighbors help out, and the burning takes about half a day.

"It's quite the ordeal because you get the fires going, and it's beautiful, too," he said.

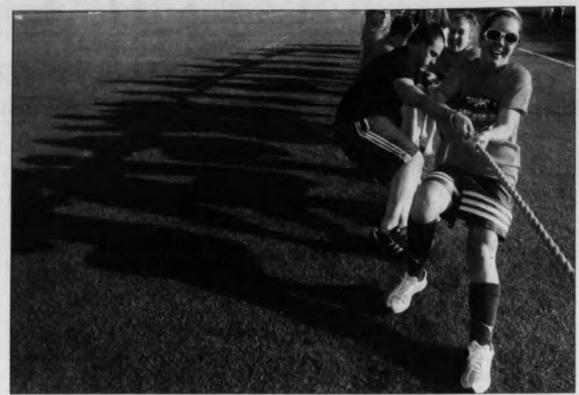

Yarrow also has seen the burnings at Konza with his fiancée.

"When I went out to see it, it was at night," he said. "Seeing it – the fire and the dark night sky – was a beautiful scene."
